5 Could not the Jews have stood upon the defensive without this royal decree? No doubt they could. But then they would have become rebels and so would have been prosecuted for a new crime. This decree of Ahasuerus rendered their self-defence lawful, which it must greatly have abated the courage of their enemies. A more unnatural mode of government cannot well be conceived, nor can we wonder that the empire was soon afterwards dismembered by a handful of Macedonians.

He is said by the Greek writers to have established a post-houses with relays of horses at proper distances; and that by causing them to travel both night and day, he astonished the ancient world by the rapidity of communication with all parts of his vast empire. Early European travellers were astonished to find similar posting establishments in the Mongol empire, having 10,000 post-houses, and 200,000 horses, and expediting despatches at the rate of 200 or 250 miles in a day. The origin of posting in Europe is generally ascribed to the university of Paris. (See Marco Polo, 2. 90).—C.

The 16th verse, indeed, seems plainly to indicate that they stood on the defensive. It is not unnatural to suppose that Haman 18 History is found in books, the evidence of history generally in institutions. Independently, therefore, of the higher evidence of Scripture, it is always accompanied by such institutional evidence as no other history can furnish. This yearly festival, which the Jews still celebrate, gives witness to the history of this book as distinct and undeniable as if Esther, Mordecai, and Ahasuerus were to rise from the dead to confirm it.—C.

5 Thus the ²Jews smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did what they would³ unto those that hated them.

6 And in Shushan the palace the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men.

7 And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, and Aspatha,

8 And Poratha, and Adalia, and Aridatha,

9 And Parmashta, and Arisai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha,

10 The⁴ ten sons of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews, slew they; but ⁵on the spoil laid they not their ⁶hand.

11 On that day the number of those that were slain in Shushan the palace was ⁷brought before the king.

12 ¶ And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in Shushan⁸ the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now, ⁹what is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee; or what ¹⁰is thy request further? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to-morrow also according unto this day's decree, and ¹¹let Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done: and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.⁷

16 But the other Jews that were in the king's provinces gathered themselves ¹⁴together, and ¹⁵stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand (but they laid not their hands on the prey) vives them. They murder, even after their death, by the laws which they have made, the projects which they have set on foot, and the writings and sentiments which they have propagated. But absurd and entangling are those laws which have pride for their source and basis. And there is great need to hasten the relief when men's lives are in danger: for when we have done wrong we cannot too quickly prevent the mischievous consequences of it. God quickly turns his people's mourning into joy. And his alarming providences in their favour effectually determine others to join them.

CHAPTER IX. REFLECTIONS. — How strangely sinners are infatuated to their own destruction; and obstinate revenge is deaf to all admonition. Fight they will, though both the hand of God and men be lifted up against them! But great numbers are friends or enemies to the people of God, just as the smiles of great men wind about: and pitiful is the work which the wicked have in hand when the terrors of God and the terrors of great men concur to dismay them. We may make the boldest attempts when not only great men favour us but the great God fights for us. And it is glorious when, in the most desperate war, the laws of self-denial, humanity, and pity are strictly regarded. Never should the people 19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar a day of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another.

20 ¶ And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far,

21 To stablish this among them, that they should keep the fourteenth day of the month Adar, and the fifteenth day of the same, yearly,

22 As the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was turned unto them from sorrow to joy, and from mourning into a good day; that they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor.

23 And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them;

24 Because Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast Pur, (that is, the lot,) to consume them, and to destroy them:

25 But when Esther came before the king, he commanded by letters, that his wicked device, which he devised against the Jews, should return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hanged on the gallows.

26 Wherefore they called these days Purim, after the name of Pur: therefore for all the words of this letter, and of that which they had seen concerning this matter, and which had come unto them,

27 The Jews ordained, and took upon them, and upon their seed, and upon all such as joined themselves unto them, so as it should not fail, of God appear selfish, worldly, or covetous. And if we receive signal mercies from God, our thankful returns ought to be quick and speedy: while they are yet fresh in our minds, and the impressions of them most sensible. Nor ought astonishing deliverances and their circumstances ever to be forgotten. Remembrance of such ought to encourage us in every subsequent distress. Yet there is great need to beware, lest what is well intended at first should by degrees become an occasion of wickedness. Nothing more purifies the heart and adorns religion than holy joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ. And nothing more pollutes the heart, and reproaches religion, than carnal mirth and sensual pleasure.

mercy in an arbitrary government, when the weakness or wickedness of the monarch is balanced by the good qualities of the minister of state. They only are truly great whose power and dignity are employed for the public good. But, alas! how unsubstantial the whole pomp, grandeur, and wealth of this world, which soon pass away!

GENERAL REMARKS ON THE HISTORICAL BOOKS.

[It has been well observed by a recent writer that 'the Old Testament may be regarded from two points of view—the religious and the literary. It is needless here to enlarge on the disproportion between the value of the two, or to re-assert the truism of the uselessness for the highest ends of the most accurate knowledge of the literary history of the Holy Scriptures, and the most minute acquaintance with their criticism, unless we also employ the Scriptures for the purpose for which they were given by divine inspiration, and make them 'profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.' But while we endeavour to keep both in their places, and especially not to exalt the lower at the expense of the higher, we must recognize the existence of the two characters borne by the Old Testament. We must not be afraid to acknowledge the undoubted fact that it is not merely a revelation of God—his being, his attributes, his will, his works, his ways; but also a national literature, and a collection of books of different characters—historical, prophetic, poetic, and didactic; of widely different dates, some perhaps misdated, by very diverse authors, and some perhaps wrongly assigned.' The notes and reflections attached to the text in this Bible have been written almost exclusively from the religious point of view. The divine origin and sacred character of the book has never been lost sight of. It has been treated, in fact, as a revelation from God rather than a work of human authorship. I now think it well to append a very few observations, from a purely literary standpoint, upon the origin, history, and character of the historical books, which, as arranged in our English version, conclude with Esther.

It is important, at the outset, to know exactly what is the meaning of the word canonical as applied to books of Scripture. The meaning of the term canon was primarily a 'canon;' then, technically, a 'measuring cane;' then, metaphorically, 'anything which serves to regulate other things.' Hence canonical books are those which form the divine rule of faith and practice—by which men determine what they are to believe, and what they are to do. In the primitive church, however, the word was not always employed in the same definite sense. By some it was used to designate those books which were publicly read in the churches; and as in some churches apocryphal books were permitted to be read, the term canonical was given to them. Thus originated the admission by the Church of Rome, and the Greek church, of certain uninspired writings into the canon of Scripture. But while the term canonical was thus somewhat vaguely used in the early church, and by the early fathers, it is most important to bear in mind that, during the first four centuries of our era, there existed no doubt or uncertainty as to the books which were inspired and of divine authority, as contradistinguished from those which were uninspired. The books of Maccabees, and a few others, are classed by some churches among the historical books of the Old Testament; but their inspiration was never admitted by the Jews, or by any Christian writer or church during the first three centuries. The Jewish canon of the Old Testament, which received the sanction of our Lord and his apostles, was identical with that of our present authorized version.

It is well to observe, however, that the arrangement of the books in the Jewish canon was different from ours. The Jews divided the Old Testament into three parts—the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms.

1. The Law included the five books of Moses—our Pentateuch in fact—and was usually written continuously upon one parchment roll, and called either 'The Law,' or 'The Book of the Law.'

2. The Prophets. Under this general name were comprehended two distinct classes of writings, which were again distinguished from each other by specific titles—(1) The Earlier Prophets, including only the historical books of Joshua, Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, and 1 and 2 Kings; (2) The Later Prophets, including all those books of the Old Testament, with one exception, which are strictly prophetic, and which were classed under two heads, namely, (a) The Greater Prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel; (b) The Twelve Minor Prophets, from Hosea to Malachi. The general name Prophets was given to them because they contained a large portion of prophetic matter, and were written by men gifted with prophetic power.

3. The Psalms, or Writings, comprehended the remaining books, which were arranged under three heads—(1) The purely poetical, always written in Jewish MSS. with the poetical accentuation, including Job, Psalms, and Proverbs; (2) The Megilloth ('Rolls'), including Canticles, Lamentations, Ruth, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. In later times these five were appointed to be read on certain festival days. (3) The third division included Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and 1 and 2 Chronicles.

This threefold division of the Old Testament canon into Law, Prophets, and Psalms, appears to have been generally adopted immediately after the close of the canon, about the year B.C. 425. It is first mentioned in the prologue to the Greek translation of 'The Wisdom of Sirach,' which may be dated about B.C. 130. It is mentioned by Philo and Josephus, the latter giving a full list. It was universally known among the Jews in the time of our Lord; hence the vast importance of his words as recorded in Luke 24. 44: 'All things must be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me.' In these words our Lord bears clear testimony to the prophetic character, and consequently to the plenary inspiration, of the whole of the Old Testament.

The enumeration of the books was not the same in the Jewish canon as in ours. The Talmud, for example, makes the total number of books in the Old Testament twenty-four; Josephus makes it twenty-two; we make thirty-nine. The Talmud arranges them as follows: Law, 5; Prophets, 8; Psalms, 11. This is done by counting 1 and 2 Samuel one, 1 and 2 Kings one, the twelve minor prophets one, 1 and 2 Chronicles one, Ezra and Nehemiah one. Josephus has the same plan, only he unites Ruth with Judges, and Lamentations with Jeremiah.

The arrangement of the books in our Bibles is widely different from that followed by the Jews, and is more in accordance with their character and subject-matter. Our arrangement is not modern. We find it in the Septuagint version, which was made in Egypt in the third century B.C. It was followed by Jerome in his translation, which is now well known as the Latin Vulgate. It was adopted by Luther and the Reformers. The general plan is a threefold division into historical, poetical, and prophetic. The first division embraces seventeen books, terminating with Esther; the second division five, terminating with Canticles; and the third division seventeen. Each of the two first divisions is arranged chronologically, and this is very important to the student who wishes to read them systematically. In the third division, however, the chronology is not adhered to; and the reader is apt to become confused when passing suddenly from Daniel, one of the latest, to Hosea, one of the earliest of the prophets; and again from Zephaniah, who prophesied during the reign of Josiah, to Haggai, who lived after the exile. It will be well to remember that in our Bibles the prophets are divided into two groups, the greater and the minor. The former group includes Daniel, and is arranged chronologically; the latter includes the twelve, and is also arranged with a near approach to chronological order.

After these general observations on the whole of the Old Testament canon, I shall now direct special attention to the first great division of our English Bible, which comprehends the Historical Books.

1. THE PENTATEUCH contains an outline of the history of the world from the creation till the death of Moses. History forms its groundwork. Wherever doctrines or moral precepts are introduced, they are connected with historic facts. As a history we may inquire, Who was its author? When was it written? and What were its sources; or, in other words, whence did its author derive his information?

The Pentateuch professes to have been written by Moses during the last forty years of his life. Such at least is the impression which a thoughtful perusal would leave on any unprejudiced mind. In Ex. 17. 14, it is recorded that the Lord commanded Moses to write an account of the war with Amalek 'in this Book.' The Hebrew words indicate a book well known to Moses—a book intended to be handed down to posterity, at once for the future guidance of rulers, and to show that God would execute his prophetic judgments. Of this book Moses was the author; and we find him from time to time receiving divine instructions to record in it the great events of Jewish history, Ex. 24. 1-7; 34. 27; Nu. 33. 1, 2. The account of its completion and solemn delivery into the custody of the priests is most important: 'And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it unto the priests, the sons of Levi, . . . and unto all the elders of Israel. . . . And Moses commanded them, saying, At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing,' De. 31. 9-11.

We have thus an indication of the way in which the Pentateuch originated. It was not written at once. Genesis was first compiled by Moses, apparently from authentic and inspired documents, written by the patriarchs, and handed down through successive generations. Genesis formed the groundwork of the Bible. When it was compiled it was called The Book. The rest of the Pentateuch consists mainly of narratives or journals of passing events, also written by Moses, and added to The Book from time to time. The Book, thus gradually formed, was at length, before the death of its great author, committed to the care of the priests, and placed beside the ark of the covenant: 'And it came to pass when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in The Book [so the Hebrew reads] until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites which bare the ark . . . saying, Take this book of the law and put it in the side of the ark . . . that it may be there for a witness against you,' De. 31. 24.

These direct indications of authorship are corroborated by evidence of another kind, but no less convincing. The book abounds with minute incidental allusions to the manners and customs, private life and public polity, of the Egyptians, with descriptions of and references to the topography, physical features, and products of the wilderness of Sinai; with genealogical and ethnological accounts of ancient peoples and tribes. The writer must therefore have been personally acquainted with Egypt and the whole desert of Arabia; and he must have possessed besides most extensive learning. All these things point to one man, and one only. Moses, who was brought up at the court of Pharaoh, who was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, who spent forty years in Egypt, and forty in the peninsula of Sinai—Moses is the only man on whom the scholar could fix his attention as the author of the Pentateuch.

What is indicated in the Pentateuch itself is fully stated by subsequent writers. In a literary point of view, the testimony of antiquity to the authorship and credibility of the Pentateuch is most interesting. The first evidence is that of a contemporary—a man who had fuller opportunity of knowing the whole truth than any other. When Joshua entered on his office as Moses' successor, he thus records the charges given to him by Jehovah: 'Be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law which Moses my servant commanded thee. . . . This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night,' &c., Jos. 1. 6, 8. Again, at the close of his life he himself gave this last solemn admonition to the Israelites: 'Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses,' Jos. 23. 6. This book of the law is quoted or referred to by a line of illustrious authors extending from the time of Joshua down to the commencement of our era. A close inspection proves that every book of the Old Testament, with the exception of Job, indicates in one way or another the previous existence of the Pentateuch. In many of them it is mentioned by name, Ju. 3. 4; 1 Sa. 2. 13; 1 Ki. 2. 3, sq.; 2 Ki. 23. 25; 2 Ch. 23. 18; Ps. 119. 7-11; Dan. 9. 11, 13; Ezra 3. 2; in others it is quoted; in others simply referred to. The testimony of Nehemiah, the last of the historical writers in the Old Testament, is especially worthy of note. He speaks of Moses as its author, Ne. 8. 14; he calls it the 'book of the law of God,' Ne. 8. 18; he says it was read throughout at the feast of tabernacles; and he gives a summary of its contents, Ne. 9. 1, sq. And the last of the prophetic books is equally clear in its testimony. Malachi says, 'Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel,' Mal. 4. 4.

I have now brought down the testimony for the authorship and authenticity of the Pentateuch to the close of the Old Testament period. I have shown it to be clear and uniform from Joshua to Malachi. The Pentateuch was known to the whole Jewish nation. It contained the code of national law, the directory for national worship, the confession of the national faith. Many of its enactments were felt to be burdensome; but no attempt was ever made to dispute their divine authority. The unanimous and continuous testimony of the Jews regarding the Pentateuch was that Moses wrote it by divine inspiration. That testimony is embodied in the authentic records of national history, in the odes and hymns of poets, and in the writings of prophets. In fact it pervades the whole national literature. We may therefore conclude that 'at no time from the days of Joshua, would it have been possible for any man, or any body of men, to introduce among the Jewish sacred records a modern work, or a modern compilation of ancient fragments and traditions, and to gain for it the confidence and respect of the nation. The imposition would have been at once detected and exposed.'

The chain of evidence does not end here. It extends unbroken down to the time of the New Testament, and from that period to our own day. In the apocryphal books of Ecclesiasticus (ch. 24. 23), Esdras (1 Esd. 1. 6), Baruch (ch. 1. 20), and Maccabees (2 Mac. 7. 30), the law of Moses is distinctly mentioned and quoted as authoritative. Philo, the distinguished Jewish philosopher of Alexandria, wrote a life of Moses, and gives a detailed account of his great work, the Pentateuch. Josephus, the representative of the Jewish literati in Palestine, as Philo was in Egypt, is equally full and clear in his testimony.

I have hitherto cited Jewish testimony alone. Some may perhaps affirm that the Jews were not impartial witnesses. I do not admit this. I affirm, on the contrary, that they were the best and safest witnesses. But to take away all ground of objection, I shall quote a few heathen testimonies. Hecateus of Abdera, a contemporary of Alexander the Great, and a man famed for learning and wisdom, wrote a history of the Jews, in which he has described the exodus, and attributed the Pentateuch to the great lawgiver. Eupolemus, a Greek historian, who lived a century and a half later, states that Moses was the author of the book of the Law. Manetho, a learned Egyptian of the age of Hecateus, ascribes to Moses the formation of the Jewish code. To these might be added Tacitus, Juvenal, Longinus, and many other classic writers, all of whom ascribe to Moses the institution of that code of laws which we find in the Pentateuch. 'These authors cover a period extending from the time of Alexander, when the Greeks first became curious on the subject of Jewish history, to that of the emperor Aurelian, when the literature of the Jews had been thoroughly sifted by the acute and learned Alexandrians. They constitute not the full voice of heathenism, but only an indication of what that voice was. Here then we have a mass of sound historical evidence for the genuineness and authenticity of the Pentateuch such as no other ancient writing can boast of.'

I have stated that the Pentateuch is a history. It is not, however, an ordinary history. It has marked characteristics, which the student must keep in mind if he would fully comprehend it. 'It is in no sense a civil history, or record of general revolutions in human affairs, or of even intellectual and social progress. It opens with an account of the origin of the earth and its various inhabitants, showing the preparations made for man—the last link in the great chain of creation—and the special object of the history in his moral and spiritual relations. The object of this record, however, was not to teach science or natural history, but to point out distinctly the relation subsisting between the Creator and his creatures, which constitutes the fundamental idea of all true religion and worship.' Nor are the delineations of the progress of human affairs, given in the immediately succeeding portions, composed in the spirit, or with the design, of mere secular history. There are indeed notices of the origin of the arts, of the founding of cities, of the wars of some ancient tribes, but all these are referred to in a way which plainly shows their entire subordination to the sacred object of the narrative. The whole history of the Cainites, for instance, is disposed of in ten verses (Ge. 4. 16-26), while the particulars referred to are adduced as indications of the character of this rejected family, and of the sources whence they looked for happiness. The wars of the eastern kings, too, are only noticed on account of the part Abraham took in rescuing Lot; and to introduce the interview of the patriarch with Melchizedec. The object, then, of the Pentateuch was not to give a full or systematic history either of the physical or political world, but simply to notice such facts in connection with both as tended to show in what relation the universe and man stand to God; what duties God requires of man; and what provision God has made for man's temporal and eternal welfare. Whatever is calculated to throw light on these subjects is narrated—all else is excluded. This I take to be the key to the narratives in the Pentateuch. This shows why incidents in the personal and family histories of the patriarchs are minutely related, why conversations, dreams, and visions are recorded with great fulness of detail; while the rise of dynasties and kingdoms is barely mentioned. This shows, too, why the account of the creation of man occupies such a large space, while the most stupendous creations and arrangements of the material universe—the countless orbs of heaven, the strata of the earth's crust, the air, the ocean, the trees, the grass, the flowers, the multitudinous forms of animal life—are either passed over or despatched in a word or two. In fact the Pentateuch looks at, and speaks of, the whole of this world, and the whole material universe, merely in its relation to a creating and governing God, and to man as a moral and immortal being. The opening words of the Pentateuch may be regarded as intended to show the relation of God to the physical universe. The next part his relation to the whole human race—that in him they live, and move, and have their being; that to him they are responsible; that by him they will finally be judged. All that follows—the great body of the Pentateuch, and indeed of the Bible—was designed to show the special and peculiar relation of God to his church and covenant people. They are his by a double ownership. He watches over them with a double interest and care.

The grand design, therefore, of the Pentateuch is to show God as the Creator and Ruler of the universe; to show when, and for what purpose, the present terrestrial economy was instituted; to show that mankind is one fraternal tribe, protected, guided, and provided for by the care of a Father, the only and omnipotent Creator; to show the object for which man was created, and the destiny in store for him; to show the provision made for man's spiritual as well as his temporal wants, in the promise of a MESSIAH; and to show the way in which God selects, governs, and redeems his church. All the historic facts, all the incidental allusions, all the scientific notices, are subservient to one or other of these objects. The Pentateuch is a system of divine truth grafted on a series of physical and historical events. It is this characteristic which makes it so infinitely superior to all the so-called sacred books in the world. The Pentateuch is not a collection of poems more or less beautiful; it is not a philosophical speculation on the origin of the universe; it is not an unintelligible jumble which expositors can twist at pleasure from a cosmological essay into a treatise on ethics. It is a sacred history; but a history designed to show God's relation to the universe as Creator and Sustainer; and especially God's dealings with man, and man's duty to God. It is only when viewed in this light we can understand why the history of the fall is given with such minuteness; and why the biographies of three patriarchs occupy whole chapters, while the histories of the mightiest nations and potentates are dismissed in a single sentence. It was to the patriarchs God revealed himself; to them the promise of the Messiah was given; and hence to those wandering chiefs attaches a grandeur and an interest greater far than that of the Babels and the Nimrods of the world.

In the remaining historical books the history of the people of Israel, which was begun in the Pentateuch, is carried on continuously from the death of Moses to the re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine after the captivity, under the leadership of Ezra and Nehemiah. They thus cover a period of a little more than a thousand years. They may be divided into two groups. The first group begins with Joshua and ends with 2 Kings. The history is continuous. The book of Joshua closes with his death, after narrating the partition of Palestine among the tribes, and the overthrow of the most formidable of the Canaanitish kings. Judges embraces the history of Israel from the death of Joshua to the death of Samson. The books of Samuel continue it down to the close of David's reign; and the two books of Kings narrate the history of the Jews to the Babylonian captivity. The second group begins with Chronicles and ends with Nehemiah. The history here is also continuous, but to a large extent it overlaps the former group. The books of Chronicles begin with genealogical tables which extend back to Adam, and reach onward to David, where the narrative is taken up, and a history of the kingdom of Judah given down to the captivity. The narrative differs from that in Kings in this respect, that nothing is said of the kingdom of the ten tribes. Ezra and Nehemiah join on to the end of Chronicles, and record the return of the several bands of Jews from Babylon, the rebuilding of the temple, and the re-establishment of the Jewish polity in Jerusalem.

The books of Ruth and Esther may be regarded as in some respects standing apart from both these groups. They are monographs of two of the most remarkable women in C. d Testament history. The former narrates the almost unparalleled filial devotion of a stranger, whose fortunes as one of the ancestors of King David and of the MESSIAH, had a peculiar interest for the Israelites. The latter contains the romantic story of Queen Esther, and her noble act of patriotism.

With one or two exceptions, the authorship of these books cannot now be definitely ascertained. Joshua doubtless wrote the greater part of the book which bears his name; and Samuel may have been the author of Judges and a part of the books of Samuel. Ezra and Nehemiah probably composed those books which have been called after them; but more than this we cannot say. Another and much more interesting question presents itself to the thoughtful reader. Whence did the authors obtain their information? It could not have been in all cases from personal knowledge, for the book of Judges embraces the history of about five hundred years; Samuel of more than a hundred years; Kings of four hundred and fifty years; and Chronicles of a still longer period. Direct revelation from God was, of course, possible. Some of the facts and truths recorded were confessedly obtained from that source; but we have no evidence that ever ordinary history was revealed. The analogy of Scripture is altogether opposed to such a theory. Whatever came within the sphere of ordinary observation was recorded in the ordinary way. There was no new revelation of it to the mind of the historian; and there was no supernatural power exerted farther than was necessary to enable fallible man to write observed facts with infallible accuracy.

In the book of Genesis we have some incidental evidence of the source from which Moses obtained his information. Close observation shows to even the ordinary reader traces of distinct narratives, or documents; sometimes overlapping each other, and recording events from different points of view, and with different details. These documents generally begin with some set phrase, such as, 'These are the generations of the heavens and the earth,' Ge. 2. 4; 'This is the book [or writing] of the generations of Adam,' ch. 5. 1; 'These are the generations of Shem,' ch. 11. 10; 'Now these are the generations of Esau,' ch. 36. 1. The details of facts, of genealogies and lists of names, and of long conversations, are given with a minuteness and circumstantiality which indicate an actor or eye-witness. The words and phrases used, and the general style, show distinctive individuality. My belief is that the leading personages in primeval history—Adam, Seth, Enoch, Abraham, Jacob, Joseph—each recorded the events which transpired in his own times; and that the records thus prepared were handed down from generation to generation, until at length they were embodied by Moses, under the infallible guidance of the Holy Spirit, in one continuous history.

In addition to the documents which Moses appears to have used in the preparation of the book of Genesis, he mentions and quotes from a separate work, 'The Book of the Wars of the Lord,' Nu. 21. 14, 15. The title and the quotation show that this must have been a collection of odes, composed at different periods, to celebrate the wars waged by Israel, under the guidance of Jehovah. They may have been so connected by brief annals as to form a continuous history, comp. Nu. 21. 17, 18; 27. 3. The authors of the succeeding historical books of the Old Testament seem to have made full use of national records and contemporary annals. Joshua (ch. 10. 13) and the author of 2 Samuel (ch. 1. 18) quote from the Book of Jasher, which appears to have contained a collection of odes on some of the most remarkable events of Israelitish history. At the close of the reign of Solomon, the sacred writer refers for a fuller history of the events of that important period to the Book of the Acts of Solomon, 1 Ki. 11. 41; and the character of the reference implies that the writer was himself largely indebted to that book. In regard to the history of King David the author of 1 Chronicles says:—'Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer; with all his reign and his might, and the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries,' ch. 29. 29, 30. In one or other of the historical books, reference is made to the following works: 'The Prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite,' 2 Ch. 9. 29; 'The Visions of Iddo the Seer against Jeroboam the Son of Nebat,' 2 Ch. 9. 29; 'The Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah,' 1 Ki. 14. 19; 'The Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah,' 2 Ch. 27. 7. The two last are probably identical, and are referred to very often both by the writers of Kings and Chronicles. The work must have been large, and was perhaps an official or national record of the leading events which occurred both in the northern and southern kingdom. Mention is likewise made of histories or annals written by Jehu the son of Hanani, 2 Ch. 20. 34; by Isaiah the prophet, 2 Ch. 26. 22; by Hosai (rendered in the English version 'the Sayings of the Seers,' 2 Ch. 33. 19); and of 'The Chronicles of King David,' 1 Ch. 27. 24. All these were probably contemporary works, from which the sacred writers extracted, under divine guidance, the facts which they wove into Bible history.

It has been objected to the view given above with regard to the original sources of the book of Genesis, that the art of writing was unknown in those primeval times. If this can be proved, the theory of written documents is untenable. But recent discoveries have dissolved this argument, and have established the fact that the art of writing with ink upon papyrus was known in Egypt long before the days of Moses. A number of Egyptian papyri, written in the hieratic character, are now in the British Museum, all of which are of the age of Moses or anterior to it. There is one in the Bibliothèque Impériale at Paris, which appears to have been written two centuries before Abraham migrated to Palestine. Recent discovery has achieved still greater triumphs on behalf of divine revelation. Away in the midst of a parched desert, near the banks of the Euphrates, are great mounds covered with dust and sand. They mark the site of Abraham's native city, Ur of the Chaldees. Some of them have been excavated, and bricks, cylinders, and other monuments have been dug up, bearing inscriptions dating back from the time of Abraham to the period of the confusion of tongues. Thus it is that some of the very earliest monuments in the world bear inscriptions which are still legible; and this fact, taken in connection with incidental allusions in the book of Genesis, seems to indicate that He who first taught the human tongue to articulate intelligible sounds, taught at the same time the human hand to trace intelligible characters.

The foregoing considerations give an additional antiquarian interest to the historical books of the Old Testament. We recognize in them not merely the earliest specimens of literature, but venerable records handed down from periods when most of us have been accustomed to think the means for forming a literature did not exist. It seems to me highly probable that to Adam the revelation of God's creative work was first made, and by him it was recorded; and that to him we are indebted for the striking narrative of his converse with God in Eden, and for the whole account of the fall. Noah was the natural historian of the deluge. Abraham was his own biographer, and we find in his life just such simple and graphic details of facts, incidents, and conversations as an eye-witness would record. Jacob alone could have written so fully the story of the dream at Bethel, the romantic incidents of Padan-aram, and the meeting with Jehovah at Mahanaim. Joseph was probably the last whose personal memorials Moses embodied in his history.

To some this view may appear strange; it may perhaps run counter to their early impressions, or to what may be called traditional theory. But does it detract one iota from the authenticity of the sacred history? Does it contradict one single passage in God's Word? Does it tend in the least to contravene the truth of the Mosaic authorship or plenary inspiration of the Pentateuch? It seems to me that it tends to encircle this venerable book with a yet brighter halo of glory, and to give it if possible a yet higher claim upon the attention of the Christian scholar and antiquary. We can see in it not merely a connected history drawn up by Moses; but we can recognize, embodied in that history, the sublime story of creation written by Adam in Eden; we can recognize there Noah's own account of the deluge, perhaps composed in the ark; we can recognize fragments of the autobiographies of Abraham, Jacob, and Joseph. We can see besides the infinite wisdom of God pervading each fragment as well as the combined history—giving life-like reality to its characters, giving perfect accuracy to its details, giving infallible certainty to scientific developments, and investing with absolute historic truth its wondrous and cheering prophecies and promises. THE BOOK OF JOB.

By whom the book of Job was written is uncertain, and conjecture is useless. It is, for the substance of it, a true history of real facts. Job is represented as really existent as Noah or Daniel, Eze. 14. 14, 20; and as a patient sufferer who obtained a joyful deliverance, Ja. 5. 11. It is an ancient history. The length of Job's life; the rare use of the divine name of JEHOVAH, and frequent use of SHADDAI, or Almighty and All-sufficient; the remarkable remains of religion in the land of Uz and the places about; the mentioning of no other idolatry but that of worshipping the sun and moon; the never making any plain allusion to the dividing of the Red Sea, or to the appearance of God to the Israelites in the wilderness, which lay at no great distance from the land of Uz; strongly tempt one to think that Job's distress might be about the time when Moses lived in the land of Midian, or perhaps a hundred years before. We have here, (1) The history of Job's sufferings and his remarkable patience under them, issuing in a sad mixture of human weakness in his cursing the day of his birth, ch. i. ii. iii. (2) A hot dispute between him and Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, his friends, Whether remarkable judgments be certain tokens of the wickedness of those upon whom they are inflicted? The aim of Job is to bewail his own affliction, complain of its weight, justify himself from gross wickedness or hypocrisy, and prove that wicked men often prosper in this world while the godly are exposed to manifold calamities. The scope of his friends is to prove that no good man is subjected to extraordinary calamities, but that the most wicked men ordinarily are; and hence to condemn Job as a hypocrite, because of his uncommon troubles, iv.-xxxi. (3) A decision of the dispute; by Elihu, then by JEHOVAH. The aim of Elihu is to leave Job's state undetermined, or even to admit it to be good; and only to charge him with his misbehaviour under his trouble, as too arrogant and self-justifying, especially when he had to do with a God of infinite sovereignty, greatness, power, wisdom, and justice. The scope of Jehovah's speech is to convince Job of his meanness, and of his own infinite power, greatness, and extensive influence; and thereby lead him into a sense of his iniquity in insisting so much upon his own justification, and complaining so unguardedly of the providence of God:— and at last he justifies him, in opposition to his three friends, in his character and sentiments, xxxii.-xlii. (4) The whole issues in Job's great honour and redoubled prosperity, xlii. In this book we have at once a most noted encouragement to patience, and a system of the most ancient believers' apprehensions and faith concerning the wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and sovereignty of God; and concerning his works of creation and providence; concerning the original and actual corruption of mankind; concerning redemption by Christ and the usefulness of good works; and, in fine, concerning the resurrection of the dead and eternal life.

[The age of the book of Job is a subject of deep interest to the biblical scholar. We have no direct evidence bearing upon it. Jewish tradition assigns to it a very high antiquity. The critic, however, must depend for his arguments mainly on the character of the book itself—on its language and style; on the manners and customs it portrays; and on its reference to, or silence regarding, the great facts and personages of sacred history. All are agreed that the language of the book is of the oldest type found in the Bible. It has certain peculiarities. It has a closer affinity to the Arabic than any other of the inspired writings, arising from the close connection of Job with the nomads of the Arabian desert. There are besides many Aramaic words and phrases in it; but these are of an archaic form, entirely different from those found in the later Hebrew writings. The style of the book—its terse, rugged, and highly poetic language—resembles portions of the book of Genesis, the song of Deborah, and the Proverbs of Solomon, and is characteristic of a primitive and imaginative people. 'The language,' says a recent writer, 'belongs altogether to a period when thought was slow, but profound and intensely concentrated; when the weighty and oracular sayings of the wise were wont to be engraved upon rocks with a pen of iron and in characters of molten lead. It is truly a lapidary style, such as was natural only in an age when writing, though known, was rarely used, before language had acquired clearness, fluency, and flexibility, but lost much of its freshness and native force.' The manners and customs so clearly developed are those of a simple and primitive people. The vast flocks and herds, the semi-nomad, semi-agricultural mode of life, the profuse hospitality, the sudden and sweeping reverses of fortune, are all characteristic of the earliest patriarchal age. The nearest approaches to them are in the histories of Abraham at Beersheba and Laban in Mesopotamia. This book affords a very graphic and full picture of the manners and customs, domestic, social, and political, of the period. Yet there is no straining in it—no aiming at effect; all is easy, natural, simple, affording clear proof that the writer was personally familiar with the scenes he depicted. The free, vigorous, and wild simplicity of the life portrayed in the book of Job bears the stamp of a hoar antiquity; and the style of the narrative shows that the author must have been contemporary with the events. Another consideration leads to the same conclusion. The book is silent regarding the Mosaic law. Its peculiar enactments and institutions, which gave a tone and distinctive character to all the subsequent literature of the Jewish nation, were manifestly unknown to the author of this book, as well as to all the actors introduced into it. The book is silent too regarding the Egyptian bondage, the exodus, the wilderness journey, and the entrance into Canaan. This silence can only be accounted for by the supposition that the date of the book was anterior to those events. 'The sanctions and penalties of the law, if known, could scarcely have been passed over by the opponents of Job, while the deliverance of Israel and the overthrow of the Egyptians supplied exactly the examples which they required to silence the complaints and answer the arguments of Job.' The forms of law, the system of worship, the illustrations and allusions of the book are those of the patriarchal age. Everything therefore in this book tends to show that it 'stands apart from all other productions of the Hebrews, belongs to a different epoch, and, in accordance with the surest canons of criticism, to an earlier age.' Hence the difficulty of deciding upon what country is called by this name. The most probable opinion, because the best supported by Scripture reference, is that which places Uz in Edom, or

Idumaea, as in La. 4. 21, where Uz and Edom are identified. The same may be seen by referring to Je. 49. 7; Eze. 25. 13; Am. 1. 11; and in Ob. 9 the men of Teman are described as inhabitants of Idumaea, and in Job 2. 11 Eliphaz is described as a Temanite. C.]

Jeremiah groups it with Egypt, Philistia, Edom, and Moab, Je. 25. 20; in one passage he seems to identify it with part of Edom:—'Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz,' La.

COURT-YARD OF SHIEK ISLAM, DAMASCUS—NEAR WHICH, ACCORDING TO THE HISTORIAN IBN ER RABI, JOB WAS BURIED. [Job, i:1.]

—“There was a man in the land of Uz whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil.” Ibn er Rabi, as quoted by Lawrence Oliphant in his Land of Gilead, says: “To the prophets buried in the region of Damascus belong Job, and his tomb is near Nawa in the district of Hauran.” Muhammed el Makdeshi, on page 81 of his Geography, as also quoted by Oliphant, says: “And in Hauran and Batanæa lie the villages of Job and his home. The chief place is Nawa, rich in wheat and other cereals.” The Hauran is the store-house of Damascus. It is a highly productive and thickly populated region. The artist who took these pictures and the writer were in Damascus when the first train went out from Damascus seventy miles into the Hauran. We give as illustrating this the court-yard of Shiek Islam in Damascus.

21 This is to be considered, a real dialogue, or an allegory; a narrative of facts, or a representation by parable. When it is recollected that JEHOVAH literally conversed with Abraham (Ge. 15. 1, 2, 7, 8, 28; 17. 1, 8, 19), and afterwards with Jacob (Ge. 28. 24, 30), and that he spoke with Moses 'face to face' (Ex. 33. 11); and then when it is further recollected that Jesus, 'the Word that was God—the Word became flesh' (Jn. 1. 1, 14), 'God manifest in the flesh' (1 Ti. 3. 16), permitted Satan to tempt him verbally (Mat. 4. 3, 4), there will be less difficulty in apprehending how this narrative may reveal and record a reality of the invisible, and not present a mere figurative emblem. But, if any be otherwise minded, still let it be remembered, that a figure is a figure of some quality, and that consequently the narrative, however interpreted, represents the reality of an invisible government over the good and the evil of this visible world.

More probably either a tribe of the Cushite Sabaeans (Ge. 10. 7), or of the people of the same name descended from Jobai (10. 28). I believe the age of Job to be too young to admit of the possibility of Cushite descendants of Sheba being here referred to.

13 ¶ And there was a day 'when his sons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

14 And there came a messenger unto Job, and said, The oxen were ploughing, and the asses feeding beside them;

15 And the ¹Sabeans⁵ fell upon them, and took them away; yea, they have slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I ²only am escaped alone to tell thee.

16 While¹ he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The ²fire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burnt up the sheep, and the servants, and consumed them; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

17. While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The ¹Chaldeans made out three bands, and fell⁶ upon the camels, and have carried them away, yea, and slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

18 While⁹ he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

19 And, behold, there came ¹a great wind from⁷ the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house, and it ²fell upon the young men, and they are dead; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

4. 21. The name was derived from Aram's eldest son, who was founder of one of the primeval tribes, which took his name, and settled in the land of Uz, Ge. 10. 23, 31. When travelling in the countries east of Palestine, I often heard from intelligent natives the tradition that Jebel-Hauran was the country of Job; and I found several places in that wild region bearing the name of the patriarch. P.]

Ver. 5. [Cursed God in their hearts. Nor blessed God in their hearts.—Note, In all efforts for promoting religion, let the heart—the conversion, the purifying, the watching of the heart, be the chief object. C.]

Ver. 6. [Of the invisible kingdom of God we know literally nothing beyond what God is pleased to reveal; therefore, when it pleases God to reveal it to us, it must needs be by corresponding emblems from visible governments. Still it must be remembered that these emblems have originals of which they are the copies; and that whilst through these emblems 'we see but in part, and know but in part,' yet we see there is a heavenly worship and an invisible government in which spirits of evil may accuse the children of God in heaven, even as their coadjutors, evil-spirited men, have ever done on earth; and in which they may obtain a limited power of inflicting injury, even as on earth wicked men obtain a similar power; while JEHOVAH restrains both, and finally compels all things to 'work together for good to them that love God.' C.]

Ver. 7. [It must not be inferred from this narrative that Satan has admission to the assembly of the saints in heaven. The Lord is here represented as holding a solemn court. Before it Satan appears. He appears as a subject of the Ruler of the Universe, though a wicked and rebellious one. And it is seen in this remarkable incident that, while pursuing his own wicked purposes, he is still made, by the all-wise, overruling providence of God, instrumental in promoting the glory of God and the ultimate good of God's true children. The dealings of Satan with Job are in harmony with what we read of him in the New Testament.

Paul's thorn in the flesh was 'a messenger of Satan,' 2 Co. 12. 7; the tares in the field were sown by Satan, Mat. 13. 29; the poor woman mentioned in Lu. 13. 16 is said to have been bound by Satan. He is thus represented as the author of physical as well as moral evil. He is permitted in God's mysterious providence to torture the body as well as to tempt and oppress the soul. His character and work are well indicated in his name, Satan, 'the adversary.' P.]

Ver. 11. [We have a key here to the moral of the book and of Job's history. It was intended to be a life lesson to all God's people. Job was a good man. He was prosperous, happy, and useful. Under the divine protection and blessing he enjoyed as large an amount of felicity as weak humanity is capable of. 'One question could be raised by envy: May not the goodness which secures such direct and tangible rewards be a refined form of selfishness? In the world of spirits, where all the mysteries of existence are brought to light, Satan suggests the doubt, 'Doth Job fear God for nought?' and asserts boldly that if these external blessings were withdrawn Job would cast off his allegiance. One problem is thus distinctly propounded which this book is intended to discuss and solve—Can goodness exist irrespective of reward? P.]

Ver. 17. [The Chaldeans. The word literally signifies robbers. They gave name to an indefinite extent of country bordering on the Euphrates. C.—The Chaldees were one of the primeval races who settled early on the great alluvial plain near the junction of the Euphrates and Tigris. Ur was a city of the Chaldees, and must always be remembered as the native place of Abraham. The Chaldees possessed the characteristics of true Bedawin—restless, fierce, and predatory. They were of Cushite origin. The raid here mentioned will remind the reader of that in which Sodom fell and Lot was carried away captive. P.]

Ver. 19. [Infidels have scoffed at a wind smiting the four corners of a house at once, but in their scoffing they but display their ignorance; a whirlwind would exactly smite the house as the messenger described. C.—Satan's power, as here represented, is very extensive. It reaches to individuals, nations, and the elements of nature. In all this the incidental statements in Job are in entire harmony with the notices in the New Testament. He is the great tempter of man, insinuating doubts, suggesting evil, visiting with bodily infirmity. He is spoken of as 'prince of this world,' and even 'god of this world,' Jn. 12. 31; 2 Co. 4. 4:—that is, of the physical world, able to employ the elements as his instruments against the people of God. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—God can easily raise up instances of remarkable piety, even among wild Arabs and amidst wealth: and he delights to propagate the fame of such as are remarkably pious. It is a mercy for children to have parents deeply and constantly concerned for the glory of God and the good of their souls. However lawful feasting and mirth may be on some occasions, there is always need after it to examine our hearts and conduct, and to supplicate the pardon of our mistakes in it. How closely Satan attends saints, ministers, and angels, particularly when they present themselves before God! We have great need to be always sober and vigilant, when our adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. And many, not less odious to God in their tempers and designs than Satan, thrust themselves into the assemblies of God's people in their house of prayer. The noted favourites and servants of God are peculiarly the objects of Satan's malice. But precise are the limits by which he is restricted by God, who knoweth all his designs. And they who approve themselves faithful servants to God, will find him faithful to them in preserving them from the snares of the devil. It is very common for Satan and his instruments to reproach the people of God as selfish and hypocritical in their religion: and almost as common to ascertain their declarations with curses and imprecations. And when God, for holy ends, lengthens Satan's chain against his own people, how inexpressibly forward is he in carrying on mischief to the utmost extent of his permission! There is need then in our happiest estate to rejoice with trembling. How heavy are sore troubles when they come from every quarter and on everything, one upon the neck of another; and the last the most dreadful. Happy is it when we are graciously weaned from created comforts, of which we may be so quickly and in so awful a manner deprived. But no affliction should indispose us for God's worship. The more trouble we feel the more need we have of his grace to support us. And the views of our death should wean us from perishing things. All that we have is God's gift, lent or given to us: and whatever we lose, enough is left to deserve our thankfulness. Nay, a spirit of meekness bestowed is a greater blessing than all that God can take from us. But, nevertheless, how powerful are the influences of God's grace, that can render his people composed and heartily resigned to his will under the sharpest trials! In all my troubles let me view God's hand and acquiesce in his will: and let them all drive me into the arms, the bosom of my God.

CHAPTER II. [Ver. 3. The object of God was holy and wise, though that of Satan was wicked and foolish. Satan insinuated that piety could not exist independent of the selfish expectation of reward. In opposition to this the Lord desired to demonstrate to Satan by a living example the existence of true and disinterested piety. And this was no mere useless demonstration of truth. Satan was man's great tempter. Had he not been signally defeated in his plans and arguments, his power must have been largely augmented. P.]

Ver. 6. [But save his life. Whatever be the power and commission of evil spirits or wicked men, God sets bounds to their malice they are unable to pass, Ps. 76. 10. C.]

Ver. 8. [Sitting in ashes is a sign of deepest humiliation and sorrow. It is still practised in the East. I have witnessed it on more than one occasion. Any sudden and heavy calamity often drives the afflicted one not only to sit down on the heap of dust and ashes, but to sprinkle them over the whole person. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How restless, impudent, steady, and active is the devil in prosecuting his malice against the saints! Disappointment but sharpens his rage, and makes him return more furious to the attack: and though proved a liar he persists in his accusations. It is honourable and necessary to resist him steadfast in the faith. But above all, great is the mercy that we have Jesus as our advocate to repel his bold accusations. To what astonishing extent doth God, for his own wise ends, permit Satan to afflict his dearest saints; nay, his Son! But glorious conquerors are they whose mind, in humble abasement, corresponds with their lowest or most loathsome circumstances of body. Heavy indeed is the trial when those who ought to be our sympathizing directors in trouble become our tempters to the most horrid sins;—to rage and disquiet; to blasphemy;—to trespass more and more against the Lord; and when those who come to comfort us have their mouths shut! But happy is he who endureth temptation; when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life! Happy is he who abhors to parley with vile suggestions, and who receives troubles as the love-messengers of his God! God can make our friends useless to us, even when they are so kind as to come to comfort us, and so wise as to prefer the house of mourning to the house of mirth. What frightful changes disease can make on us! Why then should we be proud of vile bodies? But worthless are those friends who hasten from the chamber of disease, and are glad to flee from the melancholy door: an awful proof that they are unmindful of and unprepared for death. Let then no health but what Christ is, no friend but God in him, be the trust, the boast of my soul! In the time of need all others take to themselves the wings of the morning and fly away. Miserable comforters, nay ensnaring tormentors, are they all.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. After these seven days were finished, Job gave vent to that grief which had so long stupified him, in the most bitter lamentations, and in imprecating mischiefs upon the day of his conception and birth. 3. Let, said he, the day of my birth, and the night of my conception, be utterly forgotten as if they had never been. 4. Let that unhappy day be covered with horrible darkness, and turned into night. And never let one ray of daylight appear thereon. 5. Let the most frightful darkness, and the most extensive and thick clouds, wholly possess it. Let black burning vapours, and the most fearful disasters, render it terrible to men. 6. Let gross darkness, or absolute extinction, seize upon the night of my conception. 7. Let that wretched night be as barren of everything comfortable as a flinty rock: and let men never meet together on it for feasting or mirth: nor let a single whisper of joy be heard on it. 8. Let the most skilful mourners, who imprecate woe upon the days of uncommon disasters, effectually curse it by name as the direful mother of monsters, redoubled terrors, and mischiefs. 9. Let nothing but the most frightful darkness seize upon it, without a single glimmering of a star, or the smallest dawn of a long-looked-for morning; 10. Because it did not bury me in my mother's womb, and thus secure me from those miseries which I now feel. 11. What a wretched misfortune was it that I did not die in the womb in the birth, or immediately after! 12. What a misfortune that they who received me from the womb did not let me fall on the ground, and dash out my brains; or that the nurse

But after he begins this unparalleled wailing and proceeds with his argument against his friends, this favourable testimony is never repeated. On the contrary (ch. 42. 6), he accuses himself heavily, and proclaims his deep abasement and repentance. It will be evident when Eliphaz appears (ch. xxii. 1), that both Job and his friends are in some degree in error, and that their several statements are therefore to be received under the correction of those principles by which Eliphaz expounds and defends the principles of the divine government.—C.

13 For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest, 14 With kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places for themselves;

15 Or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver:

16 Or as an hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light.

17 There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest.

18 There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor.

19 The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master.

20 Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul;⁶

21 Which long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures;

22 Which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad when they can find the grave?

23 Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in?

24 For my sighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like the waters, 25 For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me,⁸ and that which I was afraid of is come unto me.

did not refuse to give me suck! 13. For thus should I have lain still as a ship at anchor; I should have felt none of those miseries which I now endure: but had lain quiet and undisturbed in the grave; 14. Equal to kings and great men, who lie alone in the tombs which they built for themselves; 15. And to princes, who in their life had heaped up riches and wealth; 16. Or like a concealed abortive infant, which was never numbered among men. 17. There, in the grave, the most wicked can hurt no one; and they who had been restlessly tossed and wearied with violence, enjoy the profoundest safety and rest. 18. There the condemned prisoners and enslaved captives enjoy the most perfect ease, and do not so much as hear the voice of an oppressor or exactor of labour. 19. There every person is on an equal level of power and greatness; and the servant is as free as his master. 20. Is it not strange that a man should be forced to live when his miserable condition makes him heartily abhor it? 21. Who in vain wishes for death, and seeks it more eagerly than the greatest riches; 22. And who would more gladly leap into his grave than the covetous miser can meet with a rich vein of silver; 23. Being so oppressed and shut up with God's indignation that he knows no other way to turn himself? 24. For my meat doth but sustain a miserable life, which is filled up with heart-sinking sobs and loud roarings, on account of my troubles. 25. For whatever dreadful things I fear they immediately come upon me, notwithstanding all my care to prevent them. 26. In my prosperity I never securely trusted in my riches, nor indulged myself in carnal ease; yet that has not preserved me from being miserable. And in this distress I have had no rest; and yet further billows of tossing troubles are still coming upon me.

Ver. 1. [The close connection between the end of the second and beginning of the third chapter ought not to be overlooked. After this opened Job his mouth,—after the seven days of silent pantomime that ushered them in. Could anything have been more trying to the temper, more crushing to the spirit, more harrowing to the feelings of the poor bereaved, plague-stricken sufferer than the conduct of these three men? They came professedly to mourn with and comfort him; but justly has their heartless conduct been made the basis of the ironical proverb, 'Job's comforters.'

The loud lamentations, the rending of their garments, the throwing of dust on their heads, and the seven days and nights of blank silence, were all, by the wasted and heart-broken sufferer, interpreted, and, as the sequel shows, rightly interpreted, in the light of insults rather than sympathy. The visit of the three friends was probably a part of Satan's work; and if so, it was surely his masterpiece. To assail the isolated, exhausted, agonized man with hypocritical professions of sympathy, with illogical arguments, and finally with coarse and cruel invective, was enough to drive him to despair. We can scarcely wonder that, under such circumstances, even the patience of Job was exhausted, and that he broke forth into those passionate utterances, of which an example is given in this third chapter. P.]

Ver. 14. [Desolate places. No country is more remarkable for its splendid and desolate tomb-palaces than the land of Edom, where Job resided. See Laborde or any other descriptions of Idumæa, especially of the city of Petra. C.]

Ver. 26. [This sublime and pathetic, and yet humiliating speech, must be regarded as the commencement of Job's 'sin with his lips.' Hitherto his outward conduct and language had been pure and perfect; now under unparalleled trial and temptation he bursts forth into passionate exclamations. What a sad comment is this on his noble declaration: 'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How dreadful are the days, the ages, in hell, on which heaven frowns, and which earth forgets, joy forsakes, and curses attend. The best, when left to themselves, may fall into the greatest folly and guilt; become mad in their wishes, liberal of their curses, cruel to their friends, and unthankful to their God! but how much better is the never-cursed day of our spiritual and eternal birth than that of our natural! How helpless are men when they come into this world! But kind is the care of Providence about them. How levelling are the strokes of death! None of our earthly honours dare enter the grave. Happy only those in it who die in the Lord! What relief from trouble, what rest, what liberty they enjoy! But sad is the case when inflicted troubles, and want of prospect of deliverance, make even saints to long for death and bid it welcome. To quarrel with the life which God bestows, is to sin against our own mercies. Fretfulness and impatience at our lot can only aggravate our sufferings. And to reflect on God's providence is to accuse himself. It is our happiness that our time is in God's hand. The more irksome this life is we should be the more solicitous to prepare for a better. And they only are fit to die who are content to live, and, satisfied under every burden, wait cheerfully the Lord's pleasure.

CHAPTER IV. Then Eliphaz, a descendant of Esau, replied, ver. 2. Thou wilt doubtless be incensed by the slightest attempts to offer a reply: but who can restrain himself from speaking the truth upon such a pressing occasion? 3. Behold, in former times thou hast, with great pains and success, instructed many under trouble and corrected their mistakes; and by thy kind and pertinent advices hast mightily encouraged the dispirited. 4. By thy discourse thou hast encouraged and supported those whose hearts were ready to sink; and hast settled them who trembled under the burdens of their adversity. 5. But now, when fallen into their condition, thou canst not practise thy own lessons, but faintest and art struck with consternation. 6. Is not this the time to exercise thy piety, thy confidence in God, thy hope of blessings, and thy integrity of conversation? Or shall all thy religious appearances turn out a mere nothing? 7. Too good reason thou hast to suspect thyself a hypocrite: for think if thou canst remember one instance of an innocent and godly man who was ever punished with such remarkable strokes of divine vengeance as thou art. 8. For my part, aged as I am, I have always observed that it is the wicked devisers and practisers of horrible crimes who reap the fruit of their works in such a manner. 9. By the blasting and burning influence of God's fearful judgments they are more suddenly, or more gradually, reduced to misery and ruin. 10. And though, like thee and thy sons, they be oppressors, fierce and strong as lions, their power and influence are broken and themselves afflicted. 11. The mightiest tyrants and their posterity are in due time stripped of their ill-gotten wealth, and violently reduced to misery and servitude. 12-16. 17 Shall ^pmortal man be more just ^qthan prehend, amidst profound silence all around, say, 17. Shall a wretched man be more righteous than God, or justified before him? or even the most excellent man be pure before his Maker? 18. Behold! he put no firmness in his heavenly ministers, and can put no trust in them; and in his angels he has placed no ground of boasting, and can perceive defect of service and readiness to slide. 19. How then can he perceive perfection in mortal and sinful men, whom he can crush as easily as, or before the face of, a moth? 20. They are pricked and bruised in a mortar of trouble through their whole life and quickly perish for ever, without any oppressing them or regarding their fall. 21. Is not all their power and excellency plucked-up nothing, is it not destroyed together? Thy pine and melt away for want of, and without ever attaining, wisdom, or any solid and well-connected good. And though their dignity be ever so great, and their posterity ever so numerous, they die like so many beasts which have no understanding of their latter end.

Ver. 1. [Teman is closely connected with Edom, and must have been a province of it, or have bordered upon it, Je. 49. 7, 20. In one passage it is included in the same curse with the capital of Edom, Am. 1. 12. Habakkuk joins it with Mount Paran, and this may indicate that it embraced that section of Edom which lay opposite to Kadesh, Hab. 3. 3. Probably as the northern section of Edom was called Gebal, the southern may have been called Teman. P.]

Ver. 6. [Delitzsch's translation brings out what appears to be the true meaning:—'Is not thy piety thy confidence, thy hope? and the uprightness of thy ways?' That is, Dost thou not rely on thy presumed innocence before God? P.]

Ver. 9. [The argument is this: What a man sows, that shall he reap—if he sow wickedness, by the blast of God he will perish; but you, Job, are suffering by that blast, therefore it is evident you have been secretly wicked. So dark is the understanding, so uncharitable the judgment of man! But to the believer 'it is a small thing to be judged of man's judgment—he that judgeth is the Lord,' 1 Co. 4. 3, 4. C.]

Ver. 17. [How blessed the truth, that notwithstanding all man's weakness, imperfection, and sin, God has provided a way in which man shall be 'justified,' and God shall be, not merely merciful, but 'just,' and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus, Ro. 3. 26. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Such as are in sore trouble ought to be spoken to and dealt with in great tenderness. But affection must not hinder, but promote faithfulness in our reproofs and admonitions. We must not, for fear of offending, suffer sins upon our brother. And it is very edifying when such as are noted in their profession, lay out themselves for the instruction and encouragement of others in the Lord's war; warning the unruly, supporting the weak, and comforting the feeble-minded. Yet through the sorruption of our nature, it is far easier to give good counsel than to take it. Extremely trying is the situation when Satan employs the saints' godly friends to make them raise their hopes and acknowledge themselves hypocrites. The charge of hypocrisy is most frequently laid against the people of God, and is one of the hardest to be borne. But exceeding sinful is the indulgence of a censorious spirit: We must never judge of a man's state from a particular failing or from his outward lot. Though tyrannical oppressors and other sinners be recompensed in this life, yet no man knows either love or hatred by all that is before him. What singular intimacy with God might saints enjoy if duly weaned and withdrawn from the things of this life! Were our tempers duly holy, even our dreams might be means of our noted fellowship with God. O how men's spirits shrink under visits from the other world! What then must be the terrible majesty, infinite holiness, and equity of God himself! Insignificant and impure are all creatures in comparison of him. Mean are men while they live; and wretched in death if driven away in their sins. But for senseless, sinful, dying worms to impeach the wisdom, goodness, or equity of JEHOVAH's dispensations of providence, or to plead their own wealth and excellency in his presence, is the boldest presumption. How strange is it that amidst so many and remarkable warnings of an entrance into eternity, most men should live entirely unconcerned about it! And scarcely less strange that even good men should so often wrest God's oracles to serve their own humours. This oracle which Eliphaz heard gave ground to rebuke Job for his murmuring, but none to condemn him as a hypocrite.

CHAPTER V. Call now if there be indeed any that will answer this oracle in thy favour! And to which of the saints canst thou turn as an advocate for thy cause, or as an example of thy condition? 2. For the just judgment and holy jealousy of God shall destroy foolish and wicked men: and their own rage at Providence and envy of other men's happiness shall render them miserable. 3. Even when I have seen wicked men flourishing in apparently fixed prosperity, I have judged them unhappy, and predicted their fall, and quickly seen them and their families rendered miserable. 4. Their posterity are exposed to great dangers and calamities: they are oppressed and ruined in their lawsuits, or are openly punished, while there is none to deliver them. 5. The hungry vagabonds eat up their crop; and notwithstanding all the means used to secure it, or the danger to the taker, the sweep-ing scourge, and savage robber, such as the Chaldeans or Sabeans, carry off their whole substance and wealth. 6, 7. Affliction never comes to men without the just influence of God and the deserving influence of men's sin, even though it be altogether common and natural for men to meet with trouble. And men, outrageous in iniquity, and abandoned to gross impiety, shall not long flourish on the earth; but if, as born in it, a man be obstinate in gross wickedness, the flaming thunderbolts of God's judgment shall fly aloft to destroy him. 8. Truly, therefore, were I in thy place, I would humbly address myself unto God and refer myself to his disposal. 9. I would refer myself to God, who works so many things, the nature, causes, and immediate ends of which we do not understand, and so is able to help or punish as he pleases: 10. To God, who waters the earth with rain, and who causes the fountains to spring, and rivulets to run along the streets and fields; 11. That by plentiful crops he may enrich and dignify men of low condition, and exalt those that mourn in sordid baseness and misery to an extended happiness and safety: 12. To God, who defeats the craftiest designs of subtle men to raise or enrich themselves, that it is not in their power to execute the schemes which they have most cunningly contrived: 13. Who makes their own devices to produce what they studied to avoid, and to hurry them, contrary to their expectation, into dreadful ruin. 14. So that when everything seems plain and prosperous, they suddenly stumble into mistakes and misery; and in the very midst of their wisdom and felicity unexpected danger seizes upon them. 15. By which means God delivers those who fear his name from the open fury and from the treacherous flatteries and calumnies of these powerful oppressors. 16. That by observation and experience of this the poor and oppressed may be encouraged to hope in God for help and deliverance, and wicked men may be confounded and silenced.—17. And, moreover, God makes all the afflictions of his people to work remarkably for their good; therefore never complain of his corrections, but esteem them as a distinguished favour. 18. For he not only makes us grieved and pained with trouble for our good, but quickly removes his rod and bestows his comforts. 19. When manifold troubles are inflicted on others thou shalt escape if thou refer thyself to God's disposal. Nay, be thy own troubles as many as thy will, they shall do thee no real hurt. 20. God shall supply thee with food in times of famine, and protect thee in the day of battle. 21. No malicious reproachers or false witnesses shall be able to hurt thee; and thou shalt be secure amidst the depopulations of countries. 22. No pestilence, nor famine, nor ravenous beast shall be allowed to hurt thee, nor even mar thy cheerfulness. 23. The stones of the field, as if in league with thee, shall neither hurt thy person nor crop; and even the wild beasts shall submit to thee as thy conquered servants. 24. Thou shalt by experience find thy dwelling, family, and substance, wherever it is, in safety and quietness: and thou shalt be enabled to manage thy household affairs without any allowed iniquity; and shalt take an account of them without disappointment. 25. And however bare thou now appearest, as the earth in winter, thou shalt find thy 15 My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and as the stream of brooks that pass away;

16 Which are blackish⁴ by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow is hid:

17 What time they wax warm, they vanish: when it is hot,⁵ they are consumed⁷ out of their place.

18 The paths of their way are turned aside; they go to nothing, and perish.

19 The troops of Tema looked, the companies of Sheba waited for them.

20 They were confounded because they had hoped: they came thither, and were ashamed.

21 For^s now ye are nothing;¹ ye see my casting down, and are afraid.²

22 Did^v I say, Bring unto me? or, Give a reward for me of your substance?

23 Or, Deliver me from the enemy's hand? or, Redeem me from the hand of the mighty?

24 Teach me, and I will hold my tongue; and cause me to understand wherein I have erred.

25 How forcible are bright words! but what doth your arguing reprove?

26 Do ye imagine to reprove words,³ and the speeches of one that is desperate, which are as wind?⁴

27 Yea, ye overwhelm⁵ the fatherless,⁶ and ye dig a pit for your friend.

28 Now therefore be content, look upon me; for it is evident unto you⁷ if I lie.

29 Return,^h I pray you, let it not be iniquity; yea, return again, my righteousness is in⁸ it.⁹

death. But great and holy caution is necessary under trouble, that we may neither be averse to it, nor think ill of it, nor overlook and disregard it. For when blessed of God they are remarkably advantageous. They but open God's way for bestowing his distinguished favours. And those who dwell under the shadow of the Almighty shall enjoy the surest protection, inward quietness, peace with God and his creatures, comfort in their families and seed, and joy and honour in their death. Let us then attend to and profit by every truth we hear.

CHAPTER VI. But Job replied to Eliphaz: 2. O that my oppressive trouble, allotted me in God's indignation, and my extensive, unavoidable, and sinking calamity and sorrow, were but impartially and thoroughly weighed! 3. It would be found so heavy as to hinder and far surpass complaints: therefore are my words full of burning rage and tossing disquiet. 4. For grievous pains in my body, and impressions of God's wrath on my conscience, by their violence, quite dispirit my soul and waste my life. His terrible judgments shut me up on every side and set themselves as in battle array against me. 5. You do no more than brute beasts when you are easy and unconcerned amidst your prosperity. But if these animals complain in their distress, why should I be hindered? 6. Can ever such empty and unsavoury discourse as yours, without any seasoning of grace, prudence, and moderation, be either acceptable or edifying to one in such distress! 7. Those grievous afflictions, which I was once afraid to touch, I must now in anguish endure; and yet I have nothing afforded me for comfort but your loathsome and empty discourses. 8. O that God would quickly fulfil my request for death, and grant me that which I earnestly hope and long for! 9. Even that, without leaving me to languish in this miserable condition, he would, with one effectual stroke, put an end to my present life. 10. The near views of this would comfort my spirit and strengthen me to endure the severest pains; to obtain this I would gladly endure what he pleases; as I am conscious that I have not hypocritically denied, disregarded, or concealed his truths. 11. My strength is so spent that I can neither hold out nor expect recovery. I neither have nor hope for comfort in this life that I should desire it; nor do I apprehend any hurt in death that I should fear it. 12. My strength is quite incapable of bearing such troubles; nor can I but feel their terrible pressure. 13. And though I cannot deliver myself, am I therefore destitute of solid reason and true virtue? Have not I the testimony of a good conscience? Do not I know my own integrity, and the nature and degree of my sufferings, better than you? 14. Surely he who is in distress should meet with pity and compassion! and he who, instead of pitying a friend under great affliction, censures and reproaches him, shows that he has not the true fear of God, and is in a fair way to apostatize from his service. 15-20. My dearest friends promised me help and comfort; but failed me in a time of need; as torrents, which in winter make a great noise, and run with a violent stream when the melted ice and snow fall thick into them; but in the summer, when water is much needed in these hot and parched countries, are quite dried up;

the water is so diverted into other channels, exhausted by the dry desert, or exhaled into the empty air, that one can scarcely tell where they ran: and the Arabian travellers who expected to refresh themselves with the water find themselves shamefully and miserably disappointed. 21. Just so are ye deceitfully disappointing me in my adversity, when I most need your help. Instead of comforting me, you, seeing my distress, shrink from me, as if you were afraid I should prove burdensome or disgraceful to you. 22, 23. But since I never asked aught of you for either my subsistence or deliverance, can you not afford me a few comfortable words! 24. If you can convince me of any mistake, I shall submit, cease my complaints, and hearken to your counsels: 25. For solid arguments have a marvellous power to convince and persuade; but your reproofs are to no purpose, as they proceed wholly on mistakes. 26. To what purpose rail ye at words, or critically censure the speeches of a man desperate with trouble? 27. Mean ye to oppress me, when so helpless and destitute, with your bitter calumnies and revilings; and designedly to add to my misery? 28-30. Consider therefore my case and words more deliberately and impartially: you can easily detect me if I speak false or maintain a bad cause. Fairly try my cause over again, and you will find me innocent of the hypocrisy and wickedness which you have laid to my charge. Have I uttered aught that is false or wilfully wicked? or am I so stupid that I cannot distinguish that which is vain, false, or impious, from that which is true, gracious, and edifying?

Ver. 5-7. [May not ver. 5-7 be paraphrased thus:

MILITARY ROAD, DAMASCUS—SETTLED BY UZ, THE SON OF ARAI, AND SAID BY THE ARABIAN HISTORIAN, MUGIR-ED-DIN-EL-HAMBELI, TO HAVE ONCE BEEN THE PROPERTY OF JOB. [Job, vi:1.]—Wetzstein, Oliphant thinks, clearly shows that the land of Uz, mentioned in Jeremiah, xxv:20, "And all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz," cannot refer to Edom, but must have reference to a region near Damascus. While Josephus, in his Antiquities (i:6-4), states that the Arameans, whom the Greeks called the Syrians, were descended from Aram. Uz, who was a son of Aram settled Trachonitis and Damascus. The historian, Mugir-ed-din-el-Hambeli, in the chapter on the legends of the prophet, says: "Job came from El-Es Uz (?), and the Damascene province of Batanæa, which included Hauran, was his property." And Dr. Porter, one of the contributors to this Self-Interpreting Bible, says that he visited a town in the Hauran whose people claimed that Job was king of Batanæa. We give as illustrating this a view of the Military Road in Damascus.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Job excuseth his desire of death. 12 He complaineth of his own restlessness, 17 and God's watchfulness.

IS there^a not^b an appointed time to man¹ upon earth? are not his days also like the days of an hireling?²

2 As a servant earnestly desireth³ the shadow,⁴ and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work;

3 So am I made to possess months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me.

4 When I lie down, I say, 'When shall I arise, and the night be gone?' and I am full of tossings to and fro unto the dawning of the day.

5 My⁵ flesh is clothed with worms and clods of dust; my skin is broken, and become loathsome.

6 My⁶ days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope.

7 O remember that my life is⁷ wind: mine eye shall no more⁸ see good.⁹

8 The eye of him that hath seen me shall see me no more: 'thine eyes are upon me,' and I am not.¹⁰

9 As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away; so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.¹¹

10 He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more.

CHAPTER VIII.

¹ Bildad sheweth God's justice in dealing with men according to their works. ⁸ He appealeth to antiquity to prove the certain destruction of the hypocrite. ²⁰ He applieth the argument of God's just dealing to the case of Job.

THEN answered Bildad¹ the Shuhite, and said.

² How long wilt thou speak these things? and how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind?

³ Doth³ God pervert judgment? or doth the Almighty pervert justice?

⁴ If thy children have sinned against him, and he have cast them away for² their transgression;

⁵ If⁴ thou wouldest seek unto God betimes, and make thy supplication to the Almighty;

⁶ If⁵ thou wert pure and upright, surely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous.

⁷ Though⁶ thy beginning was small,⁴ yet thy latter end should greatly increase.

⁸ For inquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and prepare thyself to the search of their fathers:

⁹ (For⁷ we are but of yesterday,⁵ and know

Ver. 12. [Am I a sea or a whale? Am I an inundation, such as that of the Nile, whose risings are eagerly watched by appointed officers; or a dragon (as the word is translated, ch. 30. 29; Mi. 1. 8; Mal. 1. 3), that is, as a crocodile, which is also watched lest it should destroy those who observe the inundation. Ver. 21. [Job does not absolutely deny his sin (see ver. 20), but merely questions its magnitude in the sight of the 'Observer of men,' and murmurs against what he judges the long delay of pardon. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Our life hath its bounds and form unalterably fixed by God's decree. But how short-lived and hard is the condition of mankind on earth! Surely then we ought to be humble, whose bodies are so vile, and our days so empty and short? And sweet must the heavenly rest be to those who get thither through so much tribulation. It is proper therefore to die with affections quite weaned from this world and set on things above. But if the saints' afflictions can be so terrible, so constant on earth, what must hell be to the wicked for evermore! How terrible to be driven thither in our wickedness! to fall into the hands of an angry God! The views then of our near approaching death ought to animate our confessions of sin, our cries for pardon of it, and deliverance from it. It is a mercy that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin, the most unadvised and desperate expostulations with God not excepted; and sprinkled with this, we may cheerfully bid adieu to his valley of tears and sorrows.

CHAPTER VIII. Not without a mixture of mistake, rage, and pride, Bildad replied, 2. How long wilt thou outrageously pour forth what is dishonourable to God and unprofitable to men; and brutishly insolent, noisy, and presumptuous? 3. Can God, who has no reason to fear the displeasure or court the favour of any, wretchedly and wickedly deal unjustly with men? 4. Suppose he has fearfully punished thy children for their wickedness; 5. Yet thy humble, speedy, and penitent supplication to him for mercy would meet with due regard. 6. And wert thou thyself sincere in heart, and upright in conduct, he would, all of a sudden, bestir himself to help thee, and restore thee and thy family to its wonted peace and prosperity. 7. And however low and contemptible thy condition is at present, he would render thy happiness and glory more eminent than ever. 8-10. And as you look on us as mere ignorant upstarts, carefully inquire of the most aged and best informed, and they will assure you that God never punished but for sin, and never rejected a penitent person. 11, 12. And that as rushes and flags without abundant moisture quickly wither of their own accord; 13, 14. So without true piety, and a real enjoyment of the divine favour, the highest professions of religion, and the greatest prosperity and most extensive hopes of happiness, will quickly issue in apostasy, infamy, disappointment, and self-wrought wretchedness. 15. The wicked man may attempt to rely on his friends, family, or wealth, and may exert himself to the utmost to retain what he has, but to no purpose. 16. The external smiles of Providence may render his prosperity remarkable for a little time; and his family, wealth, and honour may greatly flourish and increase. 17. He may appear deep-rooted amidst outward enjoyments; and, in height of glory and apparent stability, may vie with the loftiest buildings of marble. 18. But quickly shall his native soil swallow him up into ruin: and he and all that he had shall quickly disappear and be forgotten. 19. Such is the mad and unsubstantial joy of the wicked, and the issue of their flourishing prosperity; while others are exalted from meanness and poverty to fill their place in the world. 20. For mark it as a certain and important truth—the mighty God will never despise, or loathe, or refuse to help and comfort an upright saint; nor will he strengthen, support, or deliver evil-doers. 21, 22. Wert thou perfect, or thoroughly penitent, he would bless thee till his favours had overwhelmed thee with raptures of thankful praise; they who hate thee and rejoice at thy present troubles should be confounded at thy restoration, while they and theirs should irrecoverably perish.

Ver. 11. [Can the rush. Believed to be the Egyptian papyrus. The rush and the flag are green and flourishing above other plants while they have mire and water, but wither before any other herb when these are dried up—meet emblem of man's transient prosperity, which withers in a moment under the displeasure of God!—Note, There is but one kind of plant that can never wither—the believing branch in the true vine, Jn. 15. 7, 16; 17. 10-12. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Men readily follow one another in running down those who are singularly distressed. And much sooner do they perceive other men's sins marked in their judgments than their own. But in every affliction it is always wise to have recourse to God for help. His blessing can soon make a remarkable change for the better in our lot. And if he knows our integrity, it matters little though men esteem us as hypocrites. God often gives his people indirect hints of the kindness which he intends for them, by words never intended for that purpose by the speakers. And the knowledge and experience of others ought carefully to be improved for our instruction and comfort. What a common sin among professors is hypocrisy and dissimulation! What a sad source of it is forgetfulness of God! But the hope of hypocrites will put the most fearful cheat upon themselves. Though it flourishes awhile, it perishes at last. And the things of nature around us suggest the most important admonitions, did we but consider them aright. The most precious truths are often abused through the misapplication of them, to make the heart of the righteous sad, and the souls of the wicked to triumph. Let me therefore never be a harsh judge of others, and never too mild with respect to myself. Let me never judge of people's character by their outward lot. It is not time, but the last judgment and eternity, that will reduce all things to apparent order.

CHAPTER IX. Immediately Job replied, 2. I know indeed that God is righteous, and that he ordinarily punishes the wicked and favours the godly. But what frail man can, in your sense, be just before God? 3. If God please to call him to a strict account he cannot answer for one of a thousand of his thoughts, words, or actions. 4. And while God is infinitely righteous, his knowledge, wisdom, and power are so unbounded, that it is impossible for any to harden himself in rebellion against him and peacefully prosper. 5-9. Against him who can in a moment remove and overturn the largest mountains—who can shake the earth out of its place, and shatter its rocky foundations—who can at pleasure forbid the rising of the sun or shining of the stars—who at pleasure spreads out or dispels the clouds, and triumphantly treads upon the swelling waves of the sea, all being subject to his will—who makes and governs all the starry constellations which appear in the north or south parts of our world. 10. And does works unsearchably marvellous and unnumbered. 11. In his providential dispensations he can pass before me and attack me; can quickly pass by and rush upon me, and continually set his works before me: and yet I cannot perceive him nor understand them. 12. Behold! he can suddenly or forcibly snatch away whatever a man has, and none can resist his infinite power, or make him to restore it, or even bring him to account for his conduct. 13. If he, the object of our adoration, continue the displays of his terrible majesty and almighty wrath in the infliction of just

21 Till he fill thy mouth with laughing, and thy lips with rejoicing.³

22 They that hate thee shall be clothed with shame; and the dwelling-place of the wicked shall come to nought.⁴

CHAPTER IX.

1 Job, acknowledging God's justice, sheweth there is no contending with him. 22 Man's innocency is not to be condemned by afflictions.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 I know it is so of a truth: but how should man be just with God?¹

3 If he will contend with him, he cannot answer him one of a thousand.²

4 He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength: who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered?

5 Which removeth the mountains, and they know not; which overturneth them in his anger;

6 Which shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble;

7 Which commandeth the sun, and it riseth not, and sealeth up the stars;

8 Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea;

9 Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south;⁵

10 Which doeth great things past finding out; yea, and wonders without number.

11 Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not: he passeth on also, but I perceive him not.

12 Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him? who will say unto him, What doest thou?

13 If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do stoop under him.⁶

14 How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him?

15 Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my Judge.

16 If I had called, and he had answered me; yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice.⁷

17 For he breaketh me with a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds without cause.⁸

him, in my own vindication; for I am not such a hypocrite as you allege. But, alas! sorrows and fears oppress my spirit.

Ver. 1. [Job admits the truth of the principle enunciated at the close of Bildad's address; namely, that God's acts and judgments are always right and just. He goes on to show that it would be impossible for man to dispute this; for if God should even condescend to enter into controversy with man, he would not be able to give him information on one of a thousand subjects that might be brought into discussion. Fear would awe him; his finite and fallible mind would utterly fail before the infinite and infallible Jehovah. To discuss or question God's dealings would therefore be mere presumption. P.]

Ver. 9. [Arcturus—Aben Ezra says it is a northern constellation, composed of seven stars, constituting Ursa Major. Orion—Aben Ezra concludes it to be Antares, a star in the constellation Scorpio. Pleiades, a cluster of stars in the constellation Taurus. Of these some additional remarks will be required on ch. 38. 31. C.]

Ver. 14. [Job's conception of the nature and attributes of God is clear and full. He was totally free from false and imperfect views which we discover even in the most distinguished of heathen philosophers. Here God is represented as a Spirit of infinite wisdom, power, and justice. All things are admitted to be subject to his direct control. The universe which he created he governs. P.]

Ver. 22. [He afflicts and cuts off both good and evil men, therefore outward calamities are no certain indications, as you suppose, of the sufferer's profligacy and of God's displeasure. C.]

Ver. 23. [If the scourge (the wicked oppressor) slay suddenly, the innocent will also be allowed to perish through false witness and unjust judgment, and thus come to the same end as the wicked. C.]

Ver. 24. [Covereth the faces of the judges. Gives up not merely the innocent to trial and condemnation, but righteous judges to have their faces covered; that is, to be themselves tried and condemned for their righteous administration of the law. See Es. 7. 8. C.]

Ver. 26. [Job gathers images of swiftness from earth (the posts), from water (the light ships of reed or papyrus, such as float swiftly on the Nile), and from the air (the eagle), to describe the rapidity with which his days of happiness have passed away' (Wordsworth). P.]

Ver. 33. [The Hebrew word translated 'daysman' signifies 'one who makes clear,' 'one who arbitrates' in a matter. The general sense is plain enough, but the doctrinal point involved is whether Job can have had any reference to Christ, the great Mediator. There is a reading of great importance found in some early MSS. It would convert the clause into a prayer:—'O that there was a daysman between us!' The latter part of the verse suggests the idea that Job must have formed some conception in his mind of one who having two natures, the divine and human, touches both God and man, and brings them together so as to make an atonement. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite goodness of God! And what is man, so mean, so sinful, that he should be mindful of him! How incapable of advancing a justifying righteousness before him! Dreadful is the case of those devils and men who harden themselves against him. His excellencies are plainly marked in his works of creation and providence. Happy are they whose God is JEHOVAH! and inexpressibly miserable his most powerful and proud opposers! In incontestable goodness he often afflicts the righteous and prospers the wicked. And it is hard to complain much of our troubles without mingling somewhat reproachful to God. Let therefore the thoughts of my own meanness, sinfulness, and mortality keep my mind low and silent before him. It is his mercy, not my merits, that must be my only plea. Conceit of my sinless perfection, and of the worth of my righteousness, will but manifest my ignorance of the spirituality of his law and of my own corruption. Let me always stand in awe of him and the power of his wrath. Let me tenderly pity such as are wounded in spirit, and earnestly pray for them, as they can sometimes scarcely pray for themselves. Let me always entertain kind and honourable thoughts of God; as hard thoughts of him are inlets to much sin and sorrow. But above all, let me bless him that Jesus Christ is the Mediator between himself and me, and that my soul is not under extreme anguish and disquiet. And while I walk in the light of the Lord, let me rejoice therein, but rejoice with trembling. Who knows what change a night or a day may bring forth!

CHAPTER X. My soul bursts asunder with weariness of being detained in the cords of natural life. I will therefore permit my complaints to vent themselves freely, be the issue what it will. I will speak fervently in the bitter anguish of my soul. 2. I will say to God, Do not condemn and punish me as a wicked man, but cause me to know for what sin or reason I am so peculiarly afflicted. 3. Is it either pleasant, profitable, or honourable to thee, or is it just and equal, that thou shouldst spoil me of all I had, and thus load me with tormenting troubles: or that with an enraged mind thou shouldst condemn the work of thine hands as good for nothing but to be a spectacle of misery? or that, by thy providential dispensations, thou shouldst appear to confirm the thoughts or encourage the practices of the wicked? 4-6. Are thy views of my conduct and state short-sighted, biased, or malignant? Are thy days so short that thou must punish me in this sudden and severe manner all at once? Are thy researches after truth tedious that thou shouldst thus by tortures attempt to force a confession of guilt from me? 7. Thou canst not but know that I am no hypocrite, and that if thou punish, none can deliver me from thy judgments. 8. By thy creating power I have been curiously and elaborately bound together with sinews; bound together in my whole frame: and wilt thou, as a raging lion, utterly tear me asunder and swallow me up? 9. Remember that thou, as my Potter, hast formed me out of the clay; and wilt thou, in this sudden and fearful manner, so quickly reduce me to dust by death? 10. Didst thou not, in the womb, purify my substance as milk, and curdle and compact the liquid matter of which my body was framed? 11. Didst thou not cover my inward parts with skin and flesh, and curiously fence and weave me together with bones and sinews? 12. Didst thou not grant me the entrance and continuance of life? And hath not thy providential care and kindness preserved me from dangers and death? 13. And, notwithstanding, hadst thou a secret purpose thus to afflict me?—I find, by experience, that it was then determined with thee. 14. That if I should sin, thou wouldst watch over me to punish me, without the least patience, pardon, or pity. 15. That if I should be wicked, fearful judgments should fall upon me; and though I should live holy and innocent, I should nevertheless be oppressed with trouble. I am full of confusion and shame on account of my uncommon circumstances; therefore look with pity on my inexpressible misery. 16. Shall my trouble still increase and exalt itself over me? Wilt thou follow me close with plagues, as a fierce lion hunteth his prey? Wilt thou, by repeated strokes of judgment, set me up as a distinguished spectacle of thy marvellous power and wrath to all around me? 17. Wilt thou bring fresh plagues upon me as witnesses of thy continued displeasure? Wilt thou still afflict me more and more? Shall nothing but diverse forms and multitudes of trouble assault me? 18. Why then didst thou bring me out of the womb at all? Why did I not die in the womb, without ever being seen on this wretched earth? 19. Or die in the birth, that I might have been carried from the womb to the grave? 20. Shall not the momentary duration of my life quickly cease? Shall I not then be allowed a short reprieve from trouble. 21, 22. Before I go to the dark region of the grave, where there is no orderly succession of day and night, summer and winter, labour and rest, but one perpetual night of gross darkness?

Ver. 2. ['Do not condemn me' thus to suffer under thine own hand, and then under the unjust accusations of my friends, without showing why these complicated calamities are sent, and without any divine interference or human sympathy for their relief. C.]

Ver. 10. [The whole process of human nutrition is by milk poured out as a fluid, and then consolidated as cheese. This is not merely true of the child sustained by the maternal aliment, but equally true through all the after-stages of life. For whatever food is received into the stomach there undergoes the first process of digestion, and is afterwards farther changed into chyle; whence by the lacteals—an innumerable system of absorbent vessels—it is carried into the thoracic duct in the form of milk; next it is commingled with the blood, which it thus serves to renew; and being in that form carried throughout the whole

17 Thou renewest thy witnesses against me, and increasest thine indignation upon me; changes and wars are against me.

18 Wherefore then hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had given up the ghost, and no eye had seen me!

19 I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

20 Are not my days few? cease then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little,

21 Before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness, and the shadow of death;

22 A land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness.

THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

3 Should thy lies make men hold their peace? and when thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed?

Ver. 15. [Without spot. Without consciousness of sin, which is as the spot of leprosy, Le. 13. 2, 4. 19; Ep. 5. 27; He. 9. 14. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—It is highly indecent and sinful to be abusive and passionate in religious controversy.

body, it supplies the necessary repairs or increase to bone, muscle, and every other part of the frame. C.]

Ver. 11. [The whole process of the growth of the human body is here described by a few graphic touches, which show an extent of anatomical and physiological knowledge that may well surprise the thoughtful student. The last clause is particularly striking:—'Thou hast woven me, intertwined me about with bones and sinews.' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—To be weary of life before God sends us our discharge, is to be unfaithful to the post which he hath given us to maintain. In suffering times we should inquire into their cause that we may answer their end; and chiefly plead for the removal of our sin and of the condemnation on account of it. But those who are awed by the majesty of God often attempt easing their mind in sinful resentments. And under extraordinary troubles it is hard to forbear impeaching the goodness or equity of God by sinful murmurings. The most humble prayers are often mingled with the most peevish and proud expostulations. Neither the views of his omniscient discernment of all our sins, nor the almighty power of his correcting hand, can awe our souls into quiet submission. Nothing but the largest supplies of grace can bridle the tongue in such a case. But when God hides himself as a Saviour his work as a Maker and Preserver should lead us to admiration and thankfulness. When he changes his way towards us, we are to believe that he has reasons hid for it in his heart, which will be shortly manifested. Alas! how sin stares the best of men in the face when God lays them under heavy troubles! Happy are they whose iniquities are pardoned, and in whom the fruit of afflictions is to take away the sin that procured them. But if sins be great, troubles heavy, life and its comforts short, death and its darkness near, let us give ourselves unto prayer. Every trouble is a call from God; and every moment of reprieve from death is an opportunity to prepare for it.

CHAPTER XI. Then Zophar the Naamathite replied, 2. Dost thou think to stop our mouths with a multitude of words, or by thy talkativeness to persuade us thou art innocent? 3. Must no one confute thy false allegations concerning thine own innocence or God's dispensations of providence? And when thou hast so insolently scoffed at God and thy friends, must none expose thee to shame, by pointing forth thy wickedness? 4. Wilt thou dare pretend to God himself that thou art quite pure and unspotted in thy principles and practice? 5. Truly my earnest wish is that he would fully and freely debate the cause with thee, and confute thy mistakes; 6. And that he would show thee the hidden methods of his providence, and reasons of his wise counsels, which infinitely transcend thy conceptions, and make thee to know that thou hast deserved far more affliction than has been laid upon thee. 7. Darest thou pretend, by thy inquiries, fully to know the secrets of his providence, or the reasons of his procedure? 8. 9. Thou mayest sooner measure the height of heaven, or fathom the depth of hell, and describe the surfaces and boundaries of the earth and sea. 10. If he attack a person or family, and shut them up in chains or nets of affliction, or bring them to his public tribunal, who can resist or refute him; or cause him to restore them to liberty? 11. For he knoweth the lovers of, and dealers in, falsehood and vanity. He exactly observes and understands what emptiness and wickedness takes place, however unimportant it appears to us, and thus hath reasons for inflicting trouble that men overlook. 12. Let then the dull and self-conceited pretender to knowledge, who just now spoke, be endued with solid wisdom; and let him who appears as rude and blockish as an ass be formed into a man of understanding. 13. CHAPTER XII.

1 Job maintaineth himself against his friends that reprove him.
13 He acknowledgeth the general doctrine of God's omnipotency.

AND Job answered and said,
2 No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you.

3 But I have understanding¹ as well as you; I am not inferior to you:² yea, who knoweth not such things as these?³

4 I am as one mocked of his neighbour, who calleth upon God, and he answereth him:⁴ the just upright man is laughed to scorn.

5 He that is ready to slip with his feet is as a lamp despised in the thought of him that is at ease.

6 The tabernacles of robbers prosper, and they that provoke God are secure; into whose hand God bringeth abundantly.

7 But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee:

8 Or speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee; and the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee.

and cruel to deal harshly with them whose spirits the Lord has wounded. Harsh censures readily exceed the bounds of truth. Such as are forward in giving the lie to others are ordinarily too guilty of falsehood themselves; and none are more forward in making their appeals to God than they whose cause is bad. How little we know of God's unbounded excellencies, or of the mysteries of his wisdom and will! men often talk well concerning them to serve a bad purpose. But surely it is very unreasonable to complain under troubles, when we have not only a God of deep counsels and unsearchable perfections to deal with; but, in providence, have a mixture of undeserved mercy in the most severe afflictions we meet with. Men often proudly imagine they know much when they are amazingly ignorant; and the more ignorant they are, so are they the more unsettled and ungovernable. But in trouble there is need of a thorough reformation of ourselves and families. Yea, to have our nature changed, our heart lifted up to God in holy desires and self-dedication, and our practice rectified. And the most holy confidence towards God; holy composure in our own mind; comfortable reflection on troubles; and joyful expectation of peace, joy, and honour, attend upon sincere and gospel repentance. If God establish us we shall not fail; nor need we fear what all the powers of hell and earth can do against us. Though we may for a little suffer an eclipse, we shall at last, without spot, shine forth in the kingdom of our Father. If the anchor of our hope be fixed on the faithfulness of God, no storms can hurt or endanger our security.—But unavoidable misery awaits the impenitent; and if not before, the hope of the wicked always expires in death.

CHAPTER XII. To this Job replied, 2. No doubt you think yourselves the only men upon earth who understand divine things, by whose death all solid knowledge will be rooted out from the world. 3. But believe it, I, and even the weakest of mankind, understood all that you have said of God's infinite wisdom, power, and justice. 4. I am indeed insolently mocked by you, my fellow-professors, even while you promise me great prosperity in answer to my prayers. But it has been the common lot of upright men to be made the butts of derision by their wicked neighbours. 5. The best of men, when reduced to the point of perishing, are generally contemned and hissed at by those who wallow in worldly ease and affluence. 6. But it is certain that the most wicked and mischievous persons often prosper remarkably in this world. 7, 8. The beasts and fowls which they live upon, or are served by, can teach you pretenders to wisdom this: the earth, that affords them her plentiful and delicious fruits; and the fishes of the sea, which gratify their appetites, plainly manifest this. 9, 10. And even the most stupid of mankind must know that this is ordered by the providence of God, who is the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of both animals and men. 11, 12. Cannot our mind distinguish truth from falsehood as exactly as the palate can do sweet from bitter? And the older we grow the more wise we ought to become. 13. Much more with the eternal God is there wisdom to know all, and strength to do everything. He never mistakes in his conceptions, nor miscarries in his purposes. 14. Behold, he destroys cities, families, persons, and things; and none can restore them. He shuts up men in prisons or troubles, and none can bring them out. 15. At one time he withholdeth rain, or restrains the springs, and the waters dry up. Anon he sends forth the rains and fountains with unbridled liberty, and the torrents of water overturn the strongest banks. 16. Nor is his wisdom inferior to his power. The sin of the deceiver, and the sufferings of the deceived, are both ordered by him to his glory. 17. He defeats the projects of the wisest statesmen, and infatuates the ablest senators. 18. He deprives kings of their royal majesty and authority, and reduces them to slavery and imprisonment. 19. The most devout priests, or the noblest ministers of state, he renders captives; and overthrows the most powerful armies of warriors. 20. Eloquence, fidelity, and prudence, gained by long experience, are rendered quite unavailable for the protection of princes or kingdoms. 21. He renders the greatest princes contemptible, and the strongest persons or armies weak. 22. He brings to light the most secret plots; makes plain the mysteries of doctrine or 13 With him is wisdom and strength, he hath counsel and understanding.

14 Behold, he breaketh down, and it cannot be built again; he shutteth up¹ a man, and there can be no opening.

15 Behold, he withholdeth the waters, and they dry up; also he sendeth them out, and they overturn the earth.

16 With him is strength and wisdom; the deceived and the deceiver are his.

17 He leadeth counsellors away spoiled, and maketh the judges fools.

18 He looseth the bond of kings,² and girdeth their loins with a girdle.

19 He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.

20 He removeth way the speech of the trusty,³ and taketh away the understanding of the aged.

21 He poureth contempt upon princes, and weakeneth the strength of the mighty.⁴

22 He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death.⁵

23 He increaseth the nations, and destroyeth them: he enargeth the nations, and straiteneth them again.

24 He taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, and causeth them to wander in a wilderness where there is no way.

25 They grope in the dark without light, providence; and advances such as were poor, obscure, condemned, or imprisoned, to liberty and glory, to honour and wealth. 23. At his pleasure he increases nations in number, power, wealth, and honour; and anon diminishes them by famine, war, and pestilence. He enlarges their boundaries, and anon shuts them up into corners. 24. Princes, magistrates, and others, he deprives of courage and wisdom; and throws them into such confusion that they know not which way to turn themselves. 25. Without either sense or success, they seek for ways to help themselves and their people out of trouble; but by his providential influence they are quite uncertain in their counsels, and doubtful what course to take.

Ver. 2. [Wisdom shall die with you.] Were this a mere irony, as many interpreters assume, then would not Job immediately claim equal wisdom for himself (ver. 3), but plead comparative ignorance, to make the irony effective. But irony is not a figure for deep and poignant affliction. The phrase is not therefore irony, but a simple acknowledgment that his learned friends were wise, and would be accompanied with wisdom to the grave. C.]

Ver. 5. [Ready to slip—to fall through the exhaustion of losses and weight of troubles. A lamp despised—a lamp that is dying out, whose former light is ungratefully forgotten. C.]

Ver. 6. [The tabernacles of robbers prosper.] Of this fact Job could furnish the evidence of the Sabeans and Chaldean marauders on a small scale, and that of the most distinguished conquerors, who have been but robbers on a great scale. Witness Nebuchadnezzar in after-times robbing the very temple of God, 2 Ki. 25. 13—17. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing is more disgusting and offensive than proud boasting; and a high conceit of our own importance is extremely foolish and sinful; contempt is all that is ordinarily gained by it. It is but just to allow others a share of reason and wisdom as well as ourselves. But often they who riot in prosperity condemn and reproach the afflicted, especially if they be religious. And peevish minds are sometimes apt to take well-meant reproofs for ill-natured and he maketh them to stagger⁶ like a drunken man.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Job reproveth his friends of false reasoning and partiality. 14 He professeth his confidence in God: 20 and entreatheth to know his own sins, and God's purpose in afflicting him.

LO, mine^a eye hath seen^b all this;¹ mine ear hath heard and understood it.

2 What^b ye know, the same do I know also: I am not inferior unto you.

3 Surely I would speak to the Almighty, and I desire to reason with God.²

4 But ye are^c forgers of lies,³ ye are all physicians of no value.

5 O that ye would altogether hold your peace; and it should be your wisdom.

6 Hear^d now my reasoning, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

7 Will^e ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully^f for him?

8 Will ye accept his person?⁵ will ye contend for God?

9 Is it good that he should search you out? or as one man mocketh another, do ye so mock him?⁶

10 He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons.

11 Shall not his excellency make you afraid? and his dread fall upon you?

12 Your remembrances are like unto ashes,⁷ your bodies to bodies of clay.

reproaches. Mankind are rarely able to give things of importance a fair trial. Those who are fast running to hell often get large portions of earthly things, even the most delicate, in their way to it. But their abuse of God's creatures in this world shall witness against them, and will but increase their torments in the next. The most instructive lessons concerning God are afforded us in the volumes of creation and providence. But how mad and criminal is it to attempt contending with him who hath all possible excellence in possession, and doth according to his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth! No king so high but he can bring down; no politician so crafty or eloquent, but he can confute; no plot so well laid, but he can frustrate; no nation so mighty, but he can destroy with his nod; no general so brave, but he can intimidate. Be thou wise, my soul, to observe these things; so shalt thou understand the loving-kindness of the Lord.

CHAPTER XIII. Behold, all these things I know from my own experience and observation, or have learned from others; whereby you may see that I need none of your instructions on these points. 3. It is with God himself that I wish to debate my own integrity, and to answer his objections against it; 4. For ye are all forgers of false doctrines and accusations against me; you unskillfully and unfaithfully prescribe bad remedies for my affliction, and misapply good ones. 5, 6. It would be more agreeable to me, and show more wisdom in you, if ye would never speak a word more on the subject, but carefully listen to what I can say in my own behalf. 7. Doth God stand in need of your false doctrines, or your false accusations of me, contrary to the dictates of your own conscience, to justify his proceedings against me? 8. Hath he so little right on his side, that you must show him favour, and oblige him by wronging me? 9. Would it be for your honour or advantage that he should narrowly examine your discourses, and the springs and motives of them? Do ye think that he will be deceived with your flatteries and high pretences to piety? 10. No; he will certainly, fearfully, and openly chastise you for your hypocritical attempts to gratify him by condemning me.

11. Should not his infinite majesty, holiness, and awful justice make you afraid to deal unjustly, even on his behalf, or to speak rashly of his ways and counsels? 12. Ye yourselves are but mean worms, sprung out of the dust before him; and your boasted remonstrances on his behalf, and your bulwarks of arguments, are worthless and weak, as heaps of dirt or clay. 13. Keep silence therefore, and do not interrupt my speech; let me but speak out my mind, be the penal issue of it what it will. 14. I am so conscious of my integrity, that I must wonder why I suffer such enraging miseries, and am exposed to such evils; and I could risk all danger to obtain a thorough reasoning with God. 15. Lo! should he utterly cut me off, and not leave me the least glimmering of hope, I would, to the last gasp, maintain mine integrity. 16. Nay, I am confident that he himself, with whom no hypocrite dare lodge his appeal, will in due time vindicate me, preserve me in or deliver me from trouble; and save me with an everlasting salvation. 17, 18. Hear me then with care and attention: I have formed a process against myself, and digested what I have to say for myself; and I know that, in the issue, I shall be cleared from every charge of hypocrisy, and manifested a righteous person. 19. What impartial person dare charge me with hypocrisy, or can prove his point? If he could, I should be silent, die with shame, and be strangled with grief. But when it is otherwise, it is death to me to neglect my own just vindication. 20-22. Do thou, great Judge, remove thy oppressing rod from off me, and let not the overwhelming awe of thy majesty terrify me: then will I, in the most bold and free manner, debate my cause with thee. 23. What, and how many, O God, are those heinous sins which require such grievous punishments? Or if I am thus afflicted for some particular crime, cause me to know it. 24. Why shouldst thou in anger thus withhold thy favours and comforts? Why shouldst thou hold and treat me as an enemy to thee? 25. How canst thou find in thy heart so violently to toss and grievously persecute me, who am so mean, weak, and contemptible in thy sight? And what honour canst thou acquire by it? 26. Thou passest the most severe sentence against me; and by 13 Hold⁸ your peace, let me alone, that I may speak, and let come on me what will.

14 Wherefore do I take my flesh in my teeth, and put my life in mine hand?

15 Though⁹ he slay me, yet will I trust in him; but I will maintain mine own ways before him.

16 He also shall be my salvation: for an hypocrite shall not come before him.

17 Hear¹⁰ diligently my speech, and my declaration with your ears.

18 Behold now, I have ordered my cause; I know that I shall be justified.¹

19 Who^a is he that will plead with me? for now, if I hold my tongue, I shall give up the ghost.

20 Only do not two things unto me; then will I not hide myself from thee.

21 Withdraw^c thine hand far from me; and let not thy dread make me afraid:

22 Then call thou, and I will answer; or let me speak, and answer thou me.

23 How many are mine iniquities and sins? make me to know my transgression and my sin.

24 Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemy?

25 Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? and wilt thou pursue the dry stubble?

26 For thou writest bitter things against me, and makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth.²

27 Thou putttest my feet also in the stocks, afflicting me with the most tormenting troubles, bringest to my mind, and punishest me for, the crimes which were committed before I well knew what I did. 27. Thy fearful judgments compass me in so close and tormenting a manner that I cannot escape. They follow me at the very heels; the tokens of thy wrath are engraven on the very soles of my feet. 28. And under these my frail carcass gradually rots into death.

Ver. 1. [This] is not in the original, and the sense would be better expressed by its omission: 'Lo, mine eye hath seen all,' i.e. all that you have seen. My knowledge is as extensive as yours, consequently my judgments and views are deserving of as much credit as yours. P.]

Ver. 7. [Wickedly]—wrongfully accusing me with the view of honouring him. Deceitfully—fallaciously, sophistically. C.]

Ver. 12. [Delitzsch translates as follows:—'Your memorable words are proverbs of dust, your strongholds are become strongholds of clay.' The meaning is that their proverbs have no bearing on the questions at issue, and are therefore as ashes; their 'strongholds,' or 'choice arguments,' are weak and worthless as ramparts of clay. P.]

Ver. 14. [Job may literally have taken his 'flesh in his teeth' to alleviate some torturing pain, as in the mercy of God pressure sometimes affords relief. Put my life in my hand—freely offering it back to the Giver, longing and praying for death. All this is no want of reliance upon God, no wish to escape his scrutiny and judgment; for though he slay me, yet will I trust in him. C.—'Wherefore should I bear my flesh in my teeth? I take my life in my hands: i.e. Wherefore should I be intent on the preservation of my life, as a wild beast on the preservation of its prey, by carrying it away between its teeth? I will calmly submit to whatever danger comes, even to death itself. P.]

Ver. 27. [Thou putttest my feet also in the stocks. Of what kind they were is not known. From the following reference to paths, they were most probably a species of clog locked on the foot, and used to prevent a slave or prisoner from escaping.—Settest a print upon the heels of my feet. the stocks were, as we have supposed, clogs, the allusion may be to some peculiar mark upon the heel, whereby a runaway culprit might be distinguished and traced. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Hot disputants generally magnify themselves and undervalue their opponents; and too seldom do they adhere to truth with proper exactness. There is great need then to pray that the Lord would mortify our pride, and keep us from the way of lying; and so far as is for his glory, keep us out of temptation. Deliberate lying is of all things most infamous. But what insignificant physicians are all but Christ to a sin-sick or wrath-sick soul! It is singularly criminal to manage the cause of God in a wicked and deceitful manner. What men call pious frauds are with God impious cheats; and devout persecutions are but horrid profanations of his name. Strict will be the scrutiny, and severe the rebukes of God, with respect to those found guilty of these things! No good intentions, no pious pretence, will avail at his awful bar. Let us then stand in awe of his perfections. Never let us, who are so mean and mortal, dare to contemn or trample on our neighbour. Never let us dare to exhibit weak and carnal remonstrances on God's behalf. But how supporting is it under trouble to have the testimony of a good conscience! and it is relieving to get our minds vented in kindly complaints. It is glorious, in the extremity of trouble, to be strong in the faith, giving glory to God, and coming boldly to his throne of grace, to ask mercy, and obtain grace to help us in the time of need. But how awful is it to find the greatest saints mingling their passions with their prayers! Lord, what is man, even in his best estate, if left to himself! And what a hell on earth sin sometimes forms for even the children of God! Sins long before committed fall with an awful weight on their conscience, and cause them to roar through disquiet of spirit. If then I find myself deserted of God; if I find my sins of youth remembered by him, and my present miscarriages strictly animadverted upon; if I find myself wasting away under his heavy hand, let me never murmur at his dispensations. Let me, holding fast his promise, believe him to be my friend, even when he puts on the appearance of an enemy. Let me firmly expect the performance of his promises, even when all the ways leading to it are seemingly shut up. Let me rejoice in the Lord when he hath left me nothing else; and in dying moments let me derive from him my ever-living consolation.

CHAPTER XIV. Man that is born of a poor, weak, frail woman, through whom he derives guilt, curses, corruptions, and infirmities, is of few days, and so surfeited with troubles that he needs pity rather than a violent hand to cut him off. 2. He makes a sparkling and fair show for a few days or hours, and then is cut down by an untimely death, or gradually, and the eternal state. 3. And wilt thou, O God, debase thyself to take notice of, frown on, or contend with such an insignificant creature, or to hale to thy tribunal and execute strict justice upon me! 4. How is it possible for such as are sinfully corrupted themselves to am by nature no worse than others, be so peculiarly punished? 5, 6. Since the period of every man's life is unalterably fixed by thy purpose and providence, why shouldst thou now torment, and not let me alone, till I have contentedly accomplished my appointed service, and obtained the wished-for evening of death? 7-12. And the rather since there is no hope that men once dead will revive into life like the stumps of old trees in a well-watered soil; but will lie crumbled into dust, and quite insensible, till the last day. 13. O that thou wouldst hide me in the state of the dead, and cover me with a vail, till this storm of thy wrath, and in pity remember me! 14. Then, how- ever impossible it be for men to rise from the dead before the last day, I should patiently, all the days of my troublesome warfare, wait for my dying hour; and no less patiently wait for my glorious change at the resurrection. 15. Then, in love to thy poor creature, thou shouldst by death call me to thy judgment-seat, and I should readily come: and at the resurrection thou shalt,

11 As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up;

12 So man ¹⁶lieth down, and riseth not: ¹⁷till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their ¹⁸sleep.⁹

13 Oh that thou wouldest ¹⁹hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past; that thou wouldest ²⁰appoint me a set time, and remember me!

14 If a man die, ²¹shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time¹ will I wait till my ²²change come.

15 Thou shalt ²³call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands.

16 For now ²⁴thou numberest my steps: dost thou not watch over my sin?

17 My transgression is ²⁵sealed up in a bag, and thou sewest up mine iniquity.

18 And surely the mountain falling cometh to nought;² and the rock is removed out of his place.

19 The waters wear the stones: thou ²⁶washest away the things which grow out of the dust of the earth; and thou destroyest the ²⁷hope of man.

20 Thou ²⁸prevailest for ever against him, and he passeth: thou ²⁹changest his countenance, and sendest him away.

21 His sons come to honour, and he ³⁰knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them.

22 But his ³¹flesh upon him shall have pain, and ³²his soul within him shall mourn.

in love to me, call me up from the grave, and I will gladly obey. 16. But now thou wrathfully observest all the steps of my life, and, as it were, greedily mark- est the smallest trips of my conduct in order to punish them. 17. The least of my sins of infirmity is as care- fully preserved in thy remembrance against me as if it were a precious treasure; and thou huntest after forged calumnies to add to my sin and punish me for it. 18, 19. But there is no more hope of men's recovery from death, or of me from this calamity, than that fallen mountains should raise themselves up, or removed rocks resume their place, or worn stones should grow again; or that which is carried away by a flood should be brought back and the devastations repaired. 20. None can resist thy deadly stroke, but must pass into eternity whenever thou requirest. Thou wrathfully changest his countenance, spoilest his beauty, and ex- pellest him as a leper from thy camp on earth. 21. And then whatever glory, power, or honour, or what- ever debasement, disgrace, or misery, his posterity meet with, he neither knows nor regards it. 22. But his body, after pains in death, shall corrupt in the grave; and his soul, embittered in death, often removes to an eternal anguish in hell.

Ver. 4. [As water cannot by its own gravity rise higher than its fountainhead, neither can a descendant of Adam and Eve become by their own efforts better than they; and they, alas! were ungrateful rebels. Blessed be his name who, while we were yet enemies, hath reconciled us by the death of his Son, Ro. 5. 10. C.]

Ver. 5. [Job had before deplored his miserable state by nature, ch. 3. 1, and he here acknowledges himself to have been conceived and born in sin, cf. Ps. 51. 5; and he pleads the corruption of human nature, which is a consequence of the fall of man, as a reason for clemency on the part of God. It is remarkable that God himself after the flood had suggested that plea, as is recorded in Genesis' (Wordsworth). P.]

REFLECTIONS.—If human life be so short, so sinful, and so wretched; if death and an awful eternity be so near; why should any be proud? Why unconcerned about spiritual, about eternal happiness? Why not live on that gracious God who hath a feeling of our infirmities; and look and long for that rest which remaineth for the people of God! Awful and awakening, though comfortable and heart-composing, are believing views of death and of the resurrection from the dead: and happy is the thought that while my body, as precious dust, sleeps in Jesus' arms of kindly care, my soul shall retire to sit with him on his throne, and there wait till my great, my last change come! If grace has changed my heart, death hath changed its nature to me: and the hope of a glorious resurrection is enough to support me under every human trouble. Everything around admonishes me of death: and nothing can resist it when God gives it the commission. Sharp are its pains and strange is the change it makes! It separates the chiefest friends! In view of it, to render me always content, let me maintain kind thoughts of God and a deep sense of my sin. And at last let it find me weaned from this perishing world, disengaged from all but a God in Christ; and singing, O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!

CHAPTER XV. Filled with indignation at the contempt which Job had discovered for him and his friends, Eliphaz replied, 2. Shouldst thou, who pretendest to wisdom, presume to throw forth such unsubstantial and boisterous nonsense; or to satisfy thy own conscience with such pernicious fancies? 3. Shouldst thou, instead of solid arguments, pour forth unprofitable wranglings? 4. Nay, shouldst thou cast off, and break through, all reverential regard to God, and refuse to pour forth thy humble complaints and prayers before him; and even tempt others to do the like? 5. Thy tongue proclaims the wickedness of thy heart, even while, by pretences of respect to God, thou attemptest to cover thy impious principles and practices. 6. I need produce no evidence of thy impiety; thy own words sufficiently manifest and prove it. 7. Wast thou formed before every other creature that thou pretendest to be wiser and better than other men? 8. Hast thou been acquainted with the most secret counsels and mysteries of God that thou shouldst engross all wisdom to thyself? 9. What secrets hast thou learned that we do not fully comprehend? 10. Among us, and on our side in this debate, we have the most aged and experienced men. 11. Darest thou to condemn the divine admonitions and comforting promises which we have suggested, and undervalue our kind and consoling discourses, as if thou knewest some better way of comfort? 12. Why do thy inward lusts thus violently transport thee into such pride, fury, and scornful contempt. 13. That thou shouldst dare to rage against the Most High, and insolently arraign the equity of his providence? 14. Can the corrupted child of a sinful parent be innocent or righteous before an infinitely holy God? 15, 16. When the loftiest angels are not without their mutability and comparative imperfections, how inexpressibly and universally abominable must the man be who, with greediness and delight, commits the most criminal impieties? 17-19. Listen carefully while I clearly declare and demonstrate unto thee what I myself have observed, and which the wisest, most powerful, and wealthy princes of former ages have observed, professed, or believed, and informed their children of. 20. The wicked tyrant is never free from inward torment; he lives in continual dread of disasters, death, and damnation, never knowing how soon they may overtake him. 21. Consciousness of guilt keeps him in perpetual terror of approaching mischiefs. And never is the destroyer more ready to attack him than when he is in the height of his prosperity. 22. In trouble he despairs of deliverance; in the night he dreads being killed before morning; everywhere he fears; and is indeed exposed to the most certain and sudden destruction. 23. In the most destitute and vagabond manner he is obliged to wander for bread. He finds, by experience, that terrible and inevitable ruin is just ready to seize him. 24. Straiting distress and anguish shall terrify him; they shall quickly rush on and prevail against him, as a strong and furious army commanded by a valiant prince: 25. As the punishment of his daring impiety, because he defied and set himself in opposition to the Almighty. 26. Daring to sin in the most insolent and presumptuous manner, even amidst the tokens of the divine indignation, inflicted or impending; 27. Because, grown rich, powerful, and successful, his only care is to pamper himself, and wallow in ease and luxury; 28. Dwelling in cities and stately houses, from whence he had driven, or murdered, the righteous proprietors; and which, by the curse of God, for his sake shall be quickly reduced to heaps of ruins, and he be obliged to shift for himself in the most miserable manner. 29. The riches and glory which he hath gotten by violence and oppression shall neither be lasting, complete, nor firmly rooted. 30. Having once entered into terrible and confounding troubles he shall never get out of them. The lightning, like flames of God's wrath, shall destroy his flourishing family and substance; and he himself shall be ruined and driven to hell by the threatened judgments of God, amidst his proud boasting. 31. Let therefore no one who is seduced to wicked or carnal security, trust in the uncertain profits, pleasures, or honours of this world, for vexations, losses, disappointments, and troubles shall be all he will get by them. 32, 33. These shall come upon him far sooner than he thinks. His riches, hopes, or children shall scarcely make their appearance, when, blasted by the justice of God, they shall all be reduced to ruin. 34. Thus suddenly and fearfully shall the stock and numerous family of hypocrites be utterly destroyed; and some terrible judgment of God shall consume the house built up by or stored with ill-gotten goods. 35. With no small pains such wicked men plot and practise mischief against others; but in the issue it usually brings ruin upon themselves.

Ver. 10. [The argument from experience is a good one; that from mere age is nothing. To give experience weight, there must be, (1) Capacity to observe; (2) Right disposition of heart towards God and man; (3) Light of truth, light of the Spirit (1 Jn. 5. 6) to guide; (4) Memory accurately to recollect, 1 Co. 15. 21; and (5) Sound judgment to compare and decide, 2 Tim. 5. 7. Truly such experience is a glorious guide to the possessor and to others; but all other experience, however lengthened, is but that of a blind man with colours—study without discovery, and words without meaning to him that utters them. C.]

Ver. 20. [From ver. 20 to the end of the chapter the speaker appears to be reciting the choice sayings of the sages of antiquity. This speech, therefore, is deserving of special note. It affords a most interesting view of the philosophy, morality, and theology of remote antiquity. There is a depth of thought, a force of truth, and terseness and beauty of expression in these words which give a high idea of Job's Arab forefathers. P.]

Ver. 28. [Desolate cities. God, who in his providential judgments has smitten the proud sinner, makes 23 He 'wandereth abroad for bread, saying, Where is it? he 'knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at his hand.

24 Trouble^o and anguish shall make him afraid; they shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle.

25 For he 'stretcheth out his hand against God, 'and strengtheneth himself against the Almighty.

27 Because he 'covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks.

30 He 'shall not depart out of darkness: the flame shall dry up his branches, and 'by the breath of his mouth³ shall he go away.

desolate his cities, and scatters his ill-gotten wealth. The verification of which may be specially seen in the ruined cities of Edom, where we believe Job dwelt; the ruins, the very tombs of which are now inhabited by such a wretched race—wretched in poverty and wickedness—as Job here describes. C.—It would appear that two distinct classes of sin are here traced, both of which eventually entail punishment:—1. Arrogant opposition to God, described in ver. 25–27. Rebellion, insolence, defiance, and carnal security are the developments of this arrogance. 2. Callous and proud contentment on the ruins of the prosperity of other men, as set forth in ver. 28. Here the powerful sinner is represented as taking possession, with haughty carelessness, of those cities and houses which had been desolated by the judgment of Heaven; and which were intended to remain as perpetual monuments of God's wrath. P.]

Ver. 33. [The olive-tree only bears fruit fully every second year. But it blossoms with equal luxuriance every year. In those years in which it does not bear the blossoms fall off; no berries are formed. How graphic, therefore, is the language of this verse! P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Men too often hold fast the false principles which they have once imbibed: and it is much easier to treat an adversary with contempt than to answer him with reason. Disputants often turn revilers rather than reasoners; and charge their opponents with things which they utterly abhor. And none are more ready to indulge pride and self-conceit in themselves than those who rage against it in their neighbours! Old men often rather boast of their knowledge and wisdom than possess it. But surely it is a humbling sight to see men so corrupt in nature, so abominable in practice; and amazing that God should love any such, and deliver them from the pit of corruption! In the study of true knowledge the experience and observation of others, as well as our own, are an excellent help. But how unbounded is the patience of God that can bear with wicked monsters so long! Yet little external happiness have they even in this world. Their seemingly purest prosperity is mingled with gall and wormwood. But if they are miserable in this world, which is their heaven, what must they be in death, in judgment, in hell!

CHAPTER XVI. To this Job replied, 2. Thou hast but repeated the senseless and tormenting jargon which I had heard before. Instead of comforting, you plague, harass, and tempt me to despair. 3. When wilt thou make an end of such idle and impertinent discourse? What has instigated and emboldened thee to answer me in this censorious, scornful, and peremptory manner? 4. Were your condition and mine exchanged I could easily insult you with a multitude of words, and deride you in a grave or scornful manner. 5. I could furiously bear you down with my mouth, and restrain my lips from uttering a single sentence of consolation;—though I hope I should rather attempt to encourage, strengthen, and comfort you. 6. But now, indeed, whether I boldly defend my innocence and pour forth my complaints, or whether I forbear, my frightful sores and griefs are nothing eased. 7. This terrible trouble has quite tired me out, and made my life a burden to me. Thou, O God, hast, with thy thunderbolts and fiery tempest, utterly destroyed my large family and all that pertained to me. 8. While others murder my character and torment my spirit, thou, by plagues and griefs, hast so wasted and disfigured my body that it testifies my great affliction, and is employed against me as a witness of my great wickedness. 9. Meanwhile my pretended friends, who indeed implacably hate me, tear my reputation and torment my spirit with their speeches. They reproach me in the most spiteful and outrageous manner; and while their eyes sparkle with anger, they cruelly set themselves to spy out every, even the least, occasion to calumniate me. 10. They behave like wild beasts, gaping to devour or deride me; they treat me with the most cruel and abusive scorn and contempt; they have met together to satisfy their infernal malice in tormenting me. 11. And God hath quite abandoned me, chained me up, and dreadfully cast me down into the hands of these and other wicked men, to be abused by them as they please. 12. Great was my former happiness and prosperity; but now God has trodden and bruised me in the press of his wrath, and made me, as it were, to boil over with dregs of trouble and desperate complaints. In the most tormenting manner he has ruined my soul, body, my children, and all that I had: he has set ^{up} as a distinguished butt of his fearful indignation. 13. Devils, wicked men, calamities and diseases, as the instruments of his judgment, compass me round about. Without mercy he torments me with the most exquisite pains in my body, anguish of mind, and terrors of conscience. 14. As a battering-ram he breaks through me with breach upon breach, still adding one dreadful plague to another: he furiously rushes upon me with the almighty force of his wrath, which I can by no means withstand or support. 15. The sackcloth I had put on all over my body, to mark my deep mourning and humiliation under his mighty hand, sticks to my ulcers; and exhausted with wounds of trouble, I have sat down on this dunghill, where all my former authority and honour are changed into contempt. 16. My face is terribly burned and tormented with trickling tears; and the very substance of my eyes is almost consumed with weeping, so that I look like one dead and rotting; 17. Although I was never a violent oppressor of men, or a hypocritical worshipper of God. 18. O earth, if I have been guilty of bloodshed or oppression, conceal it not: let the dogs lick my blood when I am dead, and let neither God nor men regard my complaints or cries for pity while I am alive! 19. But

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Job reproveth his friends of inhumanity toward him. 17 He sheweth the pitifulness of his case. 17 He maintaineth his innocence.

THEN Job answered and said,
2 I have heard many such things; 'miserable comforters are ye all.

3 Shall 'vain words have an end? or what emboldeneth thee that thou answerest?

4 I also 'could speak as ye do: if your soul were in my soul's stead, I could heap up words against you, and 'shake mine head at you.

what need these imprecations when even now the all-seeing God, who dwells in the lofty regions of heaven, is the ear and the eye witness of my virtue and true piety! 20. My companions mock and scoff at me as a hypocrite; but my soul, with floods of tears, earnestly appeals to God and begs, 21. That he would thoroughly and clearly examine my cause, and give a decision between me and my reproaching friends; 22. Since, if it be not done quickly, my troubles will soon make an end of me, and then it will be too late.

Ver. 4. [It is worthy of remark that this signal of contempt was used against our Lord upon the cross, Mat. 27. 39; Mar. 15. 39. But like all other visible signs of thought or feeling, it may have various significations, but usually those of doubt, sorrow, dissatisfaction, or scorn. C.—Job's anger is now kindled by the reproaches and false accusations of his 'vexatious comforters.' He shows his anger in his bitter and passionate retort. His anger not only leads him to sinful excess in replying to his assailants, but even to assume something like a tone of irreverence toward God. P.]

Ver. 7. [Turning from his accusers Job here directs his words to God, whom he regards as the cause of all his sufferings. It is now painful to hear Job's repinings and complaints. P.]

Ver. 15. [Horn. The horn of an animal is often both its defence and ornament. Hence the horn has been employed in Scripture as the emblem of power and glory, De. 33. 17; Ps. 132. 17. Job's losses, though great, had still left him the possession of his lands; but he had laid down all his emblems of authority, and humbled himself in the dust. C.]

Ver. 18. [These are words of deep pathos and great power. Yet they show that Job was not yet conscious of his true state as a sinner. He dares even to appeal to Heaven for a testimony of his innocence, and consequently, to some extent, of the injustice dealt out to him. His faith, however, has not yet deserted him. For life he has no hope, but he looks beyond it. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Often much is said, and yet nothing to the purpose: and miserable comforters to a wounded spirit are all duties, all friends, if God continue his frowns! Nothing but Jesus' blood—nothing but JEHOVAH'S 'mercy—can grant any solid relief. Nay, alas! men are often most cruel and harsh when they ought to be most tender and compassionate: and those who riot in prosperity and ease seldom lay much to heart the case of their extremely distressed brethren. But though complicated and terrible are the troubles of saints in this world, unspeakably more so are the troubles of the wicked in hell, where there is nothing but remorse—but torment in all its horror! Happy are they who are here purged in God's furnace! They sow in tears, but shall reap in joy. And however hard it be to bring down their mind to their lot, the testimony of their good conscience, sprinkled with Jesus' blood, shall comfort them now. They have a good

MILL ON JERUSALEM ROAD, DAMASCUS—THE TRADING POINT OF THE HAURAN WHERE JOB LIVED. [Job xvi:1.]—The traditions of the Arabs which make the Hauran in the neighborhood of Damascus, the home of Job, are not to be despised. In no part of the world have the native races undergone so little change as in this region. To this very day the descendants of the contemporaries of Job, and perhaps his own, live on the same plains once occupied by their ancestors. This gives to the tradition that fixed the home of Job in the Hauran a very different value from what it would have in a country where the people were continually changing. Chrysostom, speaking of pilgrimages in his day, said: "Many pilgrims come from the ends of the earth to Arabia in order to seek for the dung hill on which Job lay, and with rapture to kiss the ground where he suffered." We give as illustrating this traditional history concerning the land of Uz a picture of the mill on the Jerusalem Road at Damascus.

Job sheweth the pitifulness of his case.

JOB XVII.

He appealeth from men to God.

5 But I would strengthen you with my mouth, and the moving of my lips should assuage¹ your grief.

6 Though I speak, my grief is not assuaged; and though I forbear, what am I eased?²

7 But now he hath made me weary: thou hast made desolate all my company.³

8 And thou hast filled me with wrinkles, which is a witness against me: and my leanness rising up in me beareth witness to my face.

9 He teareth me in his wrath who hateth me: he gnasheth upon me with his teeth; mine enemy sharpeneth his eyes upon me.

10 They have gaped upon me with their mouth; they have smitten me upon the cheek reproachfully, they have gathered themselves together against me.

11 God hath delivered me⁵ to the ungodly, and turned me over into the hands of the wicked.

12 I was at ease, but he hath broken me asunder: he hath also taken me by my neck, and shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his mark.

13 His archers compass me round about; he cleaveth my reins asunder, and doth not spare: he poureth out my gall⁶ upon the ground.

14 He breaketh me with breach upon breach; he runneth upon me like a giant.

15 I have sewed sackcloth upon my skin, and defiled my horn in the dust.

16 My face is foul with weeping, and on my eyelids is the shadow of death;

God to appeal to as their judge and friend. Their tears shall be put into his bottle and marked in his book; and death, but destitute of its sting, shall soon set the prisoners free into a glorious eternity.

CHAPTER XVII. My spirit is maimed, broken, and confounded with trouble; and my breath stinks, as in dying persons: the days of my life are thunderstruck, shortened, and debased: nothing but the grave remains for me. 2. O God, do not my friends bitterly mock and deride me as a wicked hypocrite? And does not my mind so dwell and pore on their proud, insolent, and exasperating speeches that I cannot sleep nor mine eyes refrain from tears? 3. Come then, give me undoubted assurance that thou wilt take my cause in hand and do me justice; or give me an impartial man like myself, who in thy stead shall debate the matter with me. 4. For as for these my friends, thou hast withheld from them a common capacity to understand thy providential dispensations, therefore they can never be honoured to judge my plea. 5. He who flatters friends in their wickedness because of their prosperity, or who manifestly makes a prey of them, his posterity shall pine away in disappointment and misery. 6. Alas! both God and my friends now combine to expose me to the common contempt of the people, though lately I was their darling and the matter of their praise. 7. My eyes are rendered dim, and my mind stupefied with grief, and my body is wasted to a skeleton. 8. Upright saints in after-times shall be astonished at the sovereign dispensations of God, and the cruel abuse of my friends, with respect to me; and shall be excited to the utmost detestation of hypocrites who uncharitably censure the afflicted. 9. And, notwithstanding every scandal or discouragement, persons truly righteous shall persevere in their course of piety and virtue, and become more and more confirmed and active in it. 10. And as for you, my friends, either repent of your rash censures, or examine my cause over again; for hitherto none of you have spoken to the point. 11.

Whatever hopes you give me of recovering my wonted prosperity, I find I am a dying man, and all my designs, even the most fixed and dear, are at an end. 12. My tormenting pains and anxious thoughts keep me awake through the whole night; or if I get any moments of ease, it is but little and soon over. 13. I expect, I wait for nothing now but an entrance into the state of the dead; and I have prepared for and expect speedily to lie down in the grave. 14. In the form of my trouble, and in the exercise of my mind, I have contracted a relation to and familiarity with death, corruption, and worms. 15. The future prosperity with which you attempt to flatter me, and the temporal happiness you would have me expect, are a mere imagination. 16. These hopes shall quickly appear buried in the grave along with myself.

Ver. 1. [The graves are ready for me. The sepulchres of Edom are generally in extensive chambers, scooped out in the rocks. In these are numerous niches or shelves ready to receive the dead bodies. C.]

Ver. 3. [Lay down now, be bondsman (or surety) for me with thyself; who else should furnish surety to me?] This is a very remarkable passage. God is conceived of by Job in a double capacity; as a judge, who tries and condemns Job for his sins, and as a bondsman or surety, who takes the place of the guilty, and pledges himself for him. It would seem that Job was enabled by faith to look to Christ, the great Saviour and redeemer of the people. P.]

Ver. 5. [Not merely shall he be disappointed, but his children shall be ruined through his vain and unfulfilled expectations. C.]

Ver. 6. [Tabret. The translation of this word is diversified, according to the opinion entertained of its derivation. As it is, however, evident that Job is speaking of the present, and not of his past condition, we are disposed to adopt the translation of Tyndale, 'He hath made me a by-word of the common people. I am his jesting-stock among them.' Heath translates it prodigy, and Good translates it adard. C.—'And 17 Not for any injustice in mine hands: also my prayer is pure.

18 O earth, cover not thou my blood, and let my cry have no place.⁷

19 Also now, behold, my witness is in heaven, and my record is on high.⁸

20 My friends scorn me: but mine eye poureth out tears unto God.

21 Oh that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth for his neighbour!⁹

22 When a few years¹ are come, then I shall go the way whence I shall not return.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Job appealeth from men to God. 6 The unmerciful dealing of men with the afflicted may astonish, but not discourage the righteous. 11 His hope is no longer in life, but in death.

MY breath is corrupt,¹ my days are extinct, the graves are ready for me.

2 Are there not mockers with me? and doth not mine eye continue² in their provocation?³

3 Lay down now, put me in a surety with thee; who is he that will strike hands with me?

4 For thou hast hid thy heart from understanding, therefore shalt thou not exalt them.

5 He that speaketh flattery to his friends, even the eyes of his children shall fail.

6 He hath made me also a by-word of the people; and aforetime⁵ I was as a tabret.

7 Mine eye also is dim by reason of sorrow, and all my members⁶ are as a shadow.

8 Upright men shall be astonished at this, and the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite

9 The righteous also shall hold on his way;

I became as one in whose face they spit; that is, an utter abomination. The parallelism shows that this is the true meaning of the Hebrew word tophet. P.]

Ver 13. [Job gives way to despair. His comforters had become tormentors. They had shown utter ignorance of his state, his sufferings, and his wants; and now he resigns himself to his fate.—'If I hope, it is for the grave as my house; in darkness I make my bed.' P.]

Ver 16 [Job's only hope of relief is in death. He believes his disease to be incurable; his life is miserable; he longs for its close; and in the grave alone does he see rest from trial and sorrow. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those who have spiritual breath which cannot corrupt; life that can never fail; who have their portion in eternal blessedness, and are ready for their grave! If cruel friends exasperate my spirit and drive sleep from mine eyes, let Jesus, as my surety and redeemer, be the ground of all my hope and the source of all my joys. God can easily infatuate the wisest when they abuse his gifts. And it is mad to pursue honour and advancements by sinful methods, particularly in employing the wisdom which he has given against his cause and interest. Vain is the inconstant applause of men. While we are great the world admire us; but when depressed and poor they condemn or abhor us. But though we see things in providence which we cannot account for, we must not stagger through unbelief. And if we are faithful to God we must be zealous for his cause and take part with his oppressed people, whose bitterest enemies are usually formal hypocrites. They who are through faith brought into the way, Jesus Christ, and a course of holiness, strive not to faint or fail; nay, even difficulties and opposition quicken them. Many great pretenders to wisdom can give no profitable instructions in a day of trial; and empty are the promises and vain the hopes of carnal minds. How debasing to proud men are death and the grave! And even good men are apt to despair of that which God and he that hath 'clean hands shall be stronger and stronger.

10 But as for you all, do ye "return, and come now: for I cannot find "one wise man among you.

11 My days "are past, my "purposes are broken off, even the thoughts⁸ of my heart.

12 They "change the night into day: the light is short¹ because of darkness.

13 If I "wait, the "grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness.

14 I have said² to corruption, "Thou art my father; to the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister.

15 And where is now my "hope? as for my hope, who shall see it?

16 They⁹ shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is in the dust.

CHAPTER XVIII. In no small heat of spirit Bildad replied, 2. How long wilt thou cast forth such confused, double-meaning, and unintelligible words, as if you wanted to entrap us? Declare plainly what you intend, and after that we shall deliver our minds with the utmost clearness, freedom, and boldness. 3. For to what purpose is it to talk with one who looks upon us as a company of dull beasts, into whom nothing of wisdom can enter! 4. With impatient rage you tear and torment yourself. Must God, to humour thee, suspend or cease his government of the world, and leave everything to chance: or must he alter his immutable counsels or the fixed laws of his providence? 5. But say what thou wilt, though the wicked man may prosper for a while, all his splendour and apparent happiness shall quickly come to an end. 6. The wealth and honour of his family shall be turned into misery, contempt, and sorrow, together with himself. 7. His bold and resolute attempts to increase or maintain his prosperity shall be unsuccessful and involve him in insurmountable difficulties, and his own devices shall prove the means of his overthrow. 8. His own wiles and works bring him into inextricable difficulty and distress; and every step he takes in prosecution of his designs, or in the way of pleasing himself, is attended with perpetual danger and farther ensnares him. 9. While ruinous snares take hold of and entangle him, they who thirst for his blood, wealth, or honours shall prevail against him. 10. Even when he neither foresees nor fears it, he is always in danger of some sudden mischief. 11. Unexpected and overturning terrors shall fearfully affright him on all hands and waste him away on his feet, while they make him to run from place to place for safety. 12. Sorrows shall insatiably, as with intense hunger, feed upon him, till his strength, wealth, and honour be entirely wasted; and nothing but prepared and terrible destruction shall everywhere attend him. 13. Rottenness, fearful affliction, and a miserable death shall consume his flesh and bones. 14. Whatever he relied upon for the support of himself and his family shall utterly fail him and hasten his unhappy death; while terrors, as a mighty king, shall drive him into the depths of hell. 15. Terrors, despair, and destruction shall dwell in his habitation, which he unjustly acquired; and thunder and lightning, or some exemplary judgment, like that of Sodom, shall destroy it. 16. His whole estate, habitation, and family shall be irrecoverably ruined. 17. And the very name of him shall be buried in everlasting infamy and forgetfulness. 18. He shall be driven from his prosperity and life into misery and death, and chased out of the world as a nuisance into eternal woe. 19. None of his descendants or kindred shall long survive him to keep up his remembrance. 20. They, on every side, who behold, and they who afterward read or hear of the fearful justice of God upon him, shall be astonished and terrified at it. 21. This, indeed, is a just description of the miserable condition of the wicked at last; and thus shall those who dishonour God be abased.

Ver. 4. [Bildad in the first member of the sentence addresses his friends, describing Job; in the second he addresses Job: 'Shall the earth be forsaken for thee?' shall God leave off the care of all his other works to attend to thy vain complaints, and anticipate the final judgment to gratify your sinful impatience? C.—The meaning of the passage is:—Dost thou imagine that by thy vehement conduct, by which thou art become enraged against thyself, thou canst effect any change in the established divine order of the world? It is a divine law that sufferings are the punishments of sin; thou canst no more alter this than that at thy command, or for thy sake, the earth, which is appointed to be the habitation of man, will become desolate; or that a rock will remove from its place. P.]

Ver. 10. [Delitzsch translates as follows:—'The trap holdeth his heel fast, the noose bindeth him. His snare lieth hidden in the earth; his nets upon the path.' This brings out pretty clearly the sense of the passage. P.]

Ver. 13. [First-born of death. Who or what is this? Some think it the pestilence, others famine, but neither seems entitled to this terrible pre-eminence. Is it not the destruction or desolation (ver. 12) 'ready at his side' that is (ver. 13) twice said to 'devour his strength'? The one act points to the same agent. How blessed the hope of that time when the great devourer shall devour no more, but death shall be swallowed up in victory! 1 Co. 15. 54. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is much wisdom in leaving off contention before it be meddled with; it so furiously heats men's spirits, and makes them to misinterpret everything said or done by their antagonist; nay, makes them to misapply the most precious or tremendous truths of God! They suspect affronts that were never intended. They even torment themselves—their pride and passion proving hurtful to both soul and body. But to what terrible judgments of God, in time, in death, and chiefly in eternity, are the wicked exposed! Short-lived and unsubstantial is their prosperity, and heavy the curse that is upon them! Being abandoned of God, Satan first ensnares and afterwards torments them. Agitated by their lusts they rush headlong into ruin; till death in all its stings and terrors devours them! Then friends, physicians, and all human supports are vain. Their glorious prosperity is quickly turned into everlasting shame and contempt.

CHAPTER XIX. Job replied, Will ye never cease tormenting my soul, and bruising me as in a mortar, with your senseless revilings! 3. Ye have too often wounded me with the vilest reproaches. Ye have been shamelessly obstinate in your rebukes and cruel usage of me. 4. If I indeed had been mistaken in my opinion or practice, I have sufficiently smarted for it in my own person and estate, and so am a fit object of pity rather than of your reproach. 5. If you will still insolently declaim against me, and allege my debasing calamities as a proof of my impiety, 6. Know that I am sensible that it is God who hath in this fearful manner cast me down from my prosperity, and compassed me about with unavoidable miseries. 7. And my case is the more pitiable, that while friends abuse me with reproach, God, to whom I have repeatedly committed my cause, refuses to redress my wrongs or vindicate my innocence. 8. Nay, his plagues so surround me on every side that I can find no way of escape; and I am so overwhelmed with perplexity that I know not whither to turn myself. 9. He has deprived me of all my dignity, authority, wealth, and family. 10. In respect of children, wealth, honour, authority, and health, he has entirely destroyed me; and all my hopes of future comfort in this world he hath plucked up by the roots. 11. He has in the most violent and furious manner afflicted me, as if I had been one of his principal enemies. 12. Whole armies of troubles have, by his order, invaded me; and as with raised batteries so straitly besieged me, that not the smallest comfort I had could escape their fury. 14–16. While friends and neighbours are alienated from me, and refuse to do me any office of kindness, my maidens and men-servants treat me with the utmost disobedience and contempt. 17. My wife regards my complaints and cries no more than if she were a mere stranger, though I have begged

20 They that come after him shall be "astonied at his 'day,⁶ as they that went before⁷ were affrighted.⁸

21 Surely "such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that "knoweth not God.

CHAPTER XIX.

¹ Job, complaining of his friends' cruelty, sheweth there is misery enough in him to gratify it. ²¹ He craveth pity; ²³ professeth his belief in a future resurrection; ²⁸ and warneth his friends not to persecute him.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 How 'long will ye 'vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words?

3 These 'ten times have ye reproached me: ye are not ashamed that ye make yourselves strange to me.¹

4 And be it indeed that I have erred, mine error remaineth 'with myself.

5 If indeed ye will 'magnify yourselves against me, and plead against me my reproach:
6 Know now that 'God hath overthrown me, and hath compassed me with his net.

7 Behold, 'I cry out of wrong,² but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment.

8 He³ hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and he hath set darkness in my paths.

He hath 'stripped me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head.

10 He hath destroyed me 'on every side, and I am gone; and mine 'hope hath he 'removed like a tree.

11 He hath also 'kindled his wrath against me, and he "counteth me unto him as one of his enemies.

12 His 'troops come together, and raise up their way against me, and encamp round about my tabernacle.

13 He hath 'put my brethren far from me, and mine acquaintance are verily es-tered from me.

14 My 'kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me.

15 They that 'dwell in mine house, and my maids, 'count me for a stranger: I am an alien in their sight.

16 I called my servant,⁴ and 'he gave me no answer; I entreated him with my mouth.

17 My⁵ breath is strange to my wife,⁵ though her sympathy for the sake of our dear children, who have been so dreadfully hurried into death. 18. The very children, and ignorant people about, following the example of the rest, despise me, and treat me with the most abusive language. 19. The very men whom I had trusted with my secrets, and who had received the most distinguished tokens of my affection, abhor and hate me. 20. I am wasted with afflictions till I am little more than skin and bone; I am bruised till the teeth have fallen out of my head; and I have scarcely left me a mouth to complain. 21. O my friends, have pity upon me, when God's afflicting hand has so grievously smitten and wounded me! 22. Why do ye persecute and harass me, as if ye were an avenging God? Why, as if unsatisfied with my external calamities, do ye cruelly torment my spirit?—23. O that my protestations of uprightness, and appeals to God, were in the most legible and indelible manner registered in a book of public records, for my vindication, and for the encouragement of other upright persons under sore troubles! 24. O that they were registered in the most indelible manner in some marble rock or pillar, to continue legible to all generations! 25. For, notwithstanding these present miseries, I by faith know, and am firmly persuaded, that Jesus Christ, my Kinsman-Redeemer, liveth, having life in himself; and shall victoriously stand as the last Adam, upon the dust of the earth, in his incarnation, resurrection, and appearance to judgment. 26. And though these vermin, bred or breeding in my afflicted body, should quickly devour the whole of it, yet even in this body, when fashioned like unto his glorious body, shall I see God in my nature. 27. Whom I shall see for my own particular comfort, in my own person, when raised from the dead—though at present I am at the point of death through sore trouble, and earnestly longing for deliverance. 28. Ye should therefore say, Why do we persecute one in whom there is such soundness and strength of faith, and who hath the right cause in the present debate? 29. Beware lest God punish your inhuman cruelty to me with some terrible judgments. Such rage as yours deserves, and such wrath as God's, provoked by your sin, will bring fearful calamities upon you, that ye may know to your cost that God vindicates his own people and punishes their enemies.

Var. 3. [Ten times. This phrase is said by most expositors to stand for many times. This loose method of speaking seems, however, rather inconsistent with the unparalleled and necessary accuracy of Scripture, as a divine revelation. Is not the expression ten times literally true? Job now had spoken five times (ch. 3. 1; 6. 1; 9. 1; 12. 1; 16. 1), and his friends five times (ch. 4. 1; 8. 1; 11. 1; 15. 1; 18. 1), in all, ten times. C.]

Ver. 6. [Job's visitors had traced all his calamities to sins which, according to them, he had hypocritically concealed. Job, however, indignantly denies that in this respect he is guilty. He traces all his sufferings to God; he can assign no cause for them; he leaves the impression on the mind that he is hardly, if not unjustly, dealt with. Job's friends were unquestionably in error, and they were harsh and cruel; but Job himself was far from the truth. P.]

Ver. 17. [In aggravated forms of elephantiasis, the mouth and throat become ulcerated; breathing is difficult, and the breath is foul. In fact, as the disease progresses the limbs decay, and the half-putrid members emit a most offensive odour. P.]

Ver. 22. [The meaning of this reproachful question is, that Job regarded his persecutors as usurping to themselves a judicial divine authority over him. They were at best only his equals; they were not infallible; they might be mistaken; they had no right therefore to condemn him. P.]

Ver. 25. [From the depth of his affliction and despair, so far as regards earthly happiness and even life, the faith of the patriarch rises clear and triumphant, and finds utterance in these noble words:—'And I know, my Redeemer (my judge and vindicator) liveth (he is in existence; he knows, and will save me), and he will raise the last one (the final judge and disposer of all things) from (or over) the dust (of the grave, to call from it) those who sleep, and to raise the mortal to immortality.' P.]

Ver. 26. [Yet in my flesh shall I see God. 'Worms' and 'body' are not in the original, so that we are not bound to contemplate them in the exposition. May not the verse be paraphrased thus: 'Though as my skin is destroyed by disease, this flesh beneath it be destroyed by death, yet in my (resurrection) flesh shall I see God,' 1 Jn. 3. 2. C.]

Ver. 27. [These words may be rendered as follows. There is a tenseness and concentration of thought in them, such as characterize the most ancient literature of the Shemitic race:—'And after my skin (after its decay—after death), thus destroyed (rent and torn by the ravages of my loathsome disease), and without my flesh (in a disembodied state, when my soul is freed from this vile body), I shall see God (I shall see him with my spirit); whom I shall behold for myself (for my good, for my vindication from the unjust and cruel accusations of those now before me), and mine eyes shall see him and no other (no accuser, no stranger, but my own redeeming God)—my reins consume within me (i.e. I languish and pine here for that glorious vision). P.—Not another—not estranged as you, my friends, nor ashamed to call me brother, He. 1. 11. C.]

Ver. 29. [There is a threat implied in this verse. God, in whom Job trusts, and who will in the end vindicate him, will prove a judge to those who now persecute him. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Hard is the trial when inward vexation and outward reproach meet together; and distressing the situation when those who ought to comfort us, again and again reproach and disquiet us; and especially when men abuse us with revilings, and God shuts out our prayer, and loads us with trouble! But when God strikes a saint, almost every person and thing is ready to second his blow; and then the sparing of his relations becomes a heavier cross than the removal of them by death. It is hard to discern God's love and endeared affection amidst many and heavy strokes of paternal wrath. But happy are those who, when earth is turned into a kind of hell to them, can by faith solace themselves with the views of a future judgment; and of being for ever with Jesus Christ—their Relation, their Husband, their Deliverer, their Lord! It is dangerous to persecute the saints while their Kinsman-Redeemer lives and sees, and shall quickly judge the world. But here let me stand still, and with pleasure remark, that there is a Kinsman-Redeemer provided for fallen men; that he is a living and divine Redeemer; that I have a new-covenant interest in him, and know that I have it; that there will be a last day, when time shall be no more; that then my Redeemer, who stood as the last Adam upon earth, shall appear without sin unto my salvation; and so shall I be for ever with the Lord; I shall be like him, for I shall see him as he is!

shall be cursed to him, and quickly lost along with his unjust gain; and he shall have no comfort in anything he has. 19. Because he furiously oppressed the poor till he rendered them destitute, and violently seized houses which he built not. 20. Therefore shall he have no solid satisfaction in his own mind, but be in pain, as a travelling woman; and shall be deprived of all his desirable things. 21. He shall scarcely have wherewith to sustain himself in life, and shall have no goods left for any to look after. 22. In the very height of his prosperity he shall be terribly distressed; and even his fellows in impiety shall concur to render him miserable. 23. Whenever he shall attempt to satisfy himself in what he has, some extraordinary judgment shall of a sudden overtake him. 24. When he shall attempt to avoid one danger, another more dreadful shall overtake him; 25. And terribly shall the judgments of God torment and destroy him. Horrors of conscience shall seize upon him, as one who cannot live, and who dares not die. 26. Every kind of fearful calamities shall be reserved for him as his treasure, and shall follow him wherever he thinks to hide himself. Some awful judgment, which comes none knows how, shall consume him. His posterity and family shall, for his sake, be cursed of God, and entirely wasted and ruined. 27. God, by remarkable judgments of thunder, lightning, or the like, shall discover his notorious wickedness; and all creatures on earth shall exert themselves for his ruin. 28. His estate, which he had got by the labour of his family, shall quickly be taken from him, or destroyed, in the day when God manifests his wrath against him. 29. This is the portion and reward which God has allotted to impious and insolent sinners.

Ver. 16. [The pethen and epheli are the two serpents mentioned; most probably the bacian and effah of the Arabians, both remarkable for the rapid and fatal effects of their poison. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! the most confident and forward in a dispute are seldom in the right; and with such the kindest warning is interpreted into an affront, and returned with insolence; and the dictates of passion pass for the arguments of reason. The truths of God are often, as here, excellently explained, but miserably applied. Short-lived is a wicked man's prosperity and a hypocrite's profession. If not in this life, sin and ruin shall in the next appear certainly inseparable. And the higher men tower in sinful prosperity, their fall into the pit of destruction shall be the more dreadful. What terrible consequences have the often unthought-of sins of youth! Bitter are the issues of those sins which are reckoned sweet; and inexpressible the loss of those which are reckoned gainful. Where God's curse lies there can be no real felicity. But dreadful shall it be to the wicked when all their dreams of happiness shall be disappointed, their secret sins revealed, and the wrath of God shall take an everlasting hold of them! Let the sound of destruction—terrible destruction—everlasting destruction, that is in my ears, drive me to Jesus Christ, and the everlasting redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of my sins, according to the riches of his grace.

CHAPTER XXI. Job immediately replied, 2. Instead of pretending to comfort me, patiently and attentively hear my speech. 3. Permit me freely to declare my mind without interrupting me; and when I have finished my pertinent reasoning mock on as long as you please. 4. I have made my appeal to God; and had it been to man, I could not but be vexed to find myself thus interrupted, reproached, and abused. 5. To see in me a religious and upright man so fearfully afflicted, might overwhelm you with the most confounding astonishment at the awfully dark providence of God, and at least make you willing to hold your peace while I speak. 6. For truly, when I think on it, I am filled with the most terrifying awe of his awful judgments. 7. But if wicked men always meet with such fearful calamities as you have pretended, whence is it that many of them, for a long time, flourish in uncommon prosperity and power? 8. Nay, live to see their children, and children's children, settled in peace and security, and are not loaded with any afflictions; 10. While their cattle are extremely healthful, prosperous, and fruitful, 11, 12. Their wives with the greatest ease bring forth multitudes of children, who employ themselves in nothing but carnal joy and mirth. 13. Even unto old age they spend their days in earthly prosperity and carnal indulgence, and at last die very easily, without any sense of pain. 14, 15. Gratiating manner testify their dislike and contempt of the knowledge, service, and worship of God. 16. It is God, however, not themselves, who renders them wealthy and powerful. Yet far be it from me to join with them in their impiety; 17. But let facts speak for themselves. How often are wicked men's shining prosperity and honour extinguished by fearful judgments and justly merited destruction? How often does God, as by lot, distribute to them entangling bonds of trouble and sorrow in his anger? 18. How often are they of a sudden fearfully carried away before the sweeping whirlwinds of his awful judgments? 19. How often are either wicked men's children or themselves rewarded with fearful punishments? 20. How often do wicked men on earth experience the distinguishing judgments and hot burning wrath of the Almighty? 21. And though their children should prosper, what pain, care, or pleasure can they have about their house and family when they are cut off by an early death? 22. Dare any of you pretend to teach God how to govern the world, and whom to prosper and whom to scourge or to prescribe rules by which he must judge men, who, even the highest, are in death but the food of worms? 23, 24. Some men, both good and bad, die in the very prime of their life, and height of their prosperity, and in a very easy manner. 25. Others die amidst torments of body and anguish of mind, without ever partaking of earthly happiness or pleasure: 26. They lie down together in the same condition in the grave, and the vermin make an equal prey of both; so that none can tell who is good or who is bad by any external events. 27. I can indeed easily foresee what you, in your reproachful speeches and imaginations, will think and say. 28. You will ask, What is become of my own once princely family and of the dwellings of my children? And if Providence hath not plainly marked us out for wicked by the fearful judgments which have befallen us? 29, 30. But cannot even the most common passenger tell you that they have observed that wicked men are often preserved, as in a secret place, amidst destructive judgments, and are carried forth with pomp in the day of overflowing wrath, and the punishment of their crimes reserved for the other world? 31. Their power is often so great on earth that nobody dare reprove or can punish them for their crimes. 32. Nay, they are brought in pomp to the grave, and honourably and quietly rest in their tombs. 33. They sleep as quietly in their graves as the best; and all men, whether good or bad, by little and little follow them into that state of the dead, without any visible difference between them. 34. Why then attempt ye to comfort me with unsubstantial hopes of

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Eliphaz sheweth that man's goodness profiteth not God. 5 He accuseth Job of divers sins. 21 He exhorteth him to repentance, with promises of mercy.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

2 Can^a a man be profitable unto God,¹ as he that is wise may be profitable^b unto himself?

3 Is 'it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect?

14 Thick^m clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not; and he walketh inⁿ the circuit of⁷ heaven.

20 His^a eyes shall see his destruction, and he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

21 For what^b pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months is cut off^c in the midst?

22 Shall^d any teach God knowledge? seeing he judgeth those that are^e high.

23 One dieth^f in his full strength, being wholly at ease and quiet;

24 His^g breasts² are full of milk, and his bones are moistened with marrow:

25 And^h another dieth in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure.

26 They shall lie downⁱ alike in the dust, and the^j worms shall cover them.

27 Behold, I know your^k thoughts, and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me.

28 For ye say, Where^l is the^m house of the prince? and where are the dwelling-places of the wicked?³

29 Have ye not asked them thatⁿ go by the way?⁴ and do ye not know their tokens, 31 Who^p shall declare his way to his face? and who shall repay him^q what he hath done?

32 Yet^r shall he be brought to the grave,⁷ and shall remain in the tomb.⁸

33 The clods of the valley shall be^s sweet unto him, and every man shall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.⁹

34 How^t then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth falsehood?¹

Ver. 34. [This is the summing up—the application of the whole argument. Seeing your arguments are so fallacious, your words so illogical, why do ye attempt to comfort me? It is a mockery and an insult. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Those who are once engaged in hot disputes often lose their way through want of attention to their opponents. But what a mercy it is that saints have a gracious God to complain to when their friends refuse to hear what they say, or to regard their distress! And though the present dispensations of Providence sometimes stagger the faith and hope of the best of men, the last judgment will make all clear and plain. What a certain fact, and often a sad stumbling-block to the godly, is the prosperity of wicked men! It often hardens them in presumptuous impiety to their own destruction; but it will never reconcile a tender saint to their manner of life. It entails upon themselves and families at last the greatest misery. And however different their lot on earth or the manner of their death, or pompous their burial, everlasting punishment in hell shall be their final portion. Let therefore their heart, their counsel, their practice, be far from me. And while I adore the high wisdom of God in his providence, let me never comfort myself with vain words! Where there is no truth there can be no solid comfort.

CHAPTER XXII. Imagining that Job had accused God of injustice, in suffering the wicked to prosper and the righteous to be afflicted, Eliphaz, in great anger, replied, 2. Darest thou imagine that God is a gainer by our virtue, as we ourselves are, and so bound to reward us for it? 3. Can it add anything to his joy or profit that thou art ever so righteous and perfect? 4. Dost thou imagine that he corrects thee out of reverence to thee, or for fear thou shouldst hurt him? Will he, for fear of thee, either punish thee or give thee an account of his conduct? 5. Are not thy own monstrous and unnumbered iniquities the true cause of thy fearful sufferings? 6. For without any just cause thou hast taken pledges from thy brethren, and hast in the cruellest manner deprived the poor of their small remains of the preservatives of life. 7. Most inhumanly thou hast withheld from the weary and starving, the most cheap and common supports of their life. 8. But the man who was high-born, wealthy, and honoured, was thy favourite, and had thy land and estate at his service, and was sure to carry his cause at thy tribunal.

9. Thou hast spoiled widows of their just property, and cruelly oppressed, broken, and crushed the orphans, depriving them of all their supports and comforts. 10. Therefore entangling troubles and dangers are everywhere round about thee, and sudden fears and terrible judgments afflict thee. 11. Fearful troubles and perplexities so overwhelm thee that thou hast neither a comfortable sense nor hope of relief left; and multitudes of afflictions have with violence burst forth upon thee. 12. Is not God higher in place and dignity than the loftiest stars which thou observest? 13, 14. But like an atheist, you seem to think that God cannot know, or doth not care, what is done upon earth, but merely amuses himself in walking round the heavens. 15. Hast thou not eagerly followed, rather than prudently observed, the conduct or fate of those companions of vanity and wickedness who lived before the flood? 16. To whose horrid impieties God put a stop, by destroying them before their time, and carrying them off the earth by an overflowing deluge. 17. Who, in the most insolent manner, wished to have nothing to do with God, and imagined that nothing he could do for them could really profit them? 18. Yet it was he who granted them their whole prosperity. But God forbid that I should ever join in either principles, purposes, or practices with such abandoned wretches. 19. The righteous shall with pleasure behold the destruction of such men, as a vindication of the honour, holiness, and justice of God; and shall deride their folly in taking such courses as issue therein. 20. While the estates of such as are truly pious and virtuous remain unhurt by the providence of God, those who imitate these ancient sinners are consumed by thunder, lightning, or some other fearful judgment. 21. But since God hath not entirely consumed thee, try, without a moment's delay, to get the spiritual knowledge of God; accustom thyself to him by re-

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Job longeth to appear before God, 6 in confidence of being heard with mercy and acquitted. 8 God, though invisible, obserreth our ways. 11 Job's innocency. 13 God's decree is immutable.

THEN Job answered and said,
2 Even 'to-day is my complaint 'bitter: my 'stroke² is heavier than my groaning.

3 Oh³ that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his seat!

4 I 'would order 'my cause before him, and fill my mouth with arguments.

5 I 'would know the words which he would answer me, and understand what he would say unto me.

6 Will⁴ he plead against me with his great power? No; but he would put strength in me.

7 There⁵ the righteous might dispute with him; so should I be delivered for ever from my judge.³

8 Beho'd, 'I go forward, but he is not there, and backward, but I cannot perceive him:⁴

9 On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him.

10 But 'he knoweth the way⁵ that I 'take: when he 'hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold.

11 My 'foot hath held his steps; his way have I kept, and not declined.

12 Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; 'I have esteemed⁷ the peated supplications; receive peace from him; and quietly submit to him by an unfeigned repentance. Thus shall all manner of blessings, temporal and eternal, come to thee. 22. Receive, and duly meditate on, the instructive revelations which he may be pleased to afford thee. 23. If by a true faith and sincere repentance thou turn to the Lord, thou shalt be again advanced to thy former honours and prosperity; and the punishment which thy sins have brought upon thee shall be removed far from thee and whatever belongs to thee. 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold, and fine gold, in such amazing plenty, and with such ease, as if they were the most common things. 25. For the all-sufficient and almighty God shall be thy portion and the protector of thy treasures; and thou shalt have astonishing heaps of silver. 26. Thou shalt delight thyself in the enjoyment of God's love and favour; and shalt with confidence and comfort present thyself at his throne of grace, and hope for his eternal felicity. 27. With sweet pleasure shall he hear thy prayers; and thou shalt pay thy vows of gratitude to him with the warmest affection. 28. Whatever thou hast purposed shall be accomplished; and divine direction, success, and comfort shall attend all thy proceedings. 29. When wicked men around thee are distressed or destroyed, thou shalt confidently expect honour and felicity; and God shall bring to eminent and extensive happiness the person who is cast down in his own eyes. 30. Nay, at thy request he shall marvellously deliver not only many innocents, but even the guilty, and their country, by means of thy prayers, piety, and virtue.

Ver. 2. [Eliphaz charges Job with presumption. He accuses him of magnifying himself in the sight of God. His argument is to this effect:—'Can even a great man (such is the meaning of the Hebrew term) be profitable to God? Thou seemest to think that God is thy debtor, on the ground of thy righteousness. But suppose that thou art righteous, wouldst thou thus be conferring a favour on God? No; by righteousness a wise man is profitable to himself. But I affirm that thou art not righteous, and that thou art injuring thyself by unrighteousness' (Wordsworth). P.]

Ver. 6. [This being a grievous and direct charge, it is probable that Job, in the midst of his charities which his friends cannot deny (ch. 29. 15; 31. 16-22), had, as a man of business, been careful of his rights, righteous exacting being to the poor themselves frequently better than promiscuous and inconsiderate giving, and that Eliphaz now exaggerates this carefulness and justice into this hideous picture of unfeeling oppression. C.]

Ver. 7. [A charge of inhospitality, one of the most grievous in the estimation of the Arabians and their kindred nations. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing can be more absurd than to imagine that we can make God our debtor by anything which we can do. We have nothing good in us, or done by us, but what is God's gift. None are too great for God to humble. And if he spare the wicked, it is not for fear of them, but in patient pity towards them. Even good men, from a pretended regard to God, are apt to charge their neighbour with things which he heartily abhors. But if God's greatness, omniscience, and equity should deter men from crimes, they should also deter us from unjustly charging our neighbour with them. He that condemns the righteous is an abomination to the Lord. How tremendous are the judgments of Heaven, and happy they who can safely rejoice amidst them; or who, in a Christian manner, take warning from them! Through ignorance of and enmity against God, through neglect and contempt of his word, and through obstinate continuance in sin, men lose the greatest blessings and incur the greatest evils. But oh the delight in God, the bold confidence towards him, the intimate fellowship with him, the satisfaction even in managing outward affairs, the safety in times of common calamity, and usefulness towards others—that knowledge of and peace with God, spiritual improvement of God's word, and sincere repentance do produce!

CHAPTER XXIII. Job replied, 2. Notwithstanding all your pretended advices and comforts, I have as much reason for bitter complaints as ever; and my sufferings far exceed my expressions of grief. 3. O that I were admitted into God's own immediate presence, and allowed to present myself before his judgment-seat! 4. I would, in an orderly manner, set the justice of my cause before him, and fully support it with arguments, vindicating myself, and confuting your reproachful allegations. 5. I would insist for his decision whether I be a hypocrite or not; and that he would show me plainly why he hath so afflicted me. 6. Would he employ his infinite power and majesty to bear me down? No; but would mercifully strengthen and encourage me to plead with him. And suppose he should plead against me in the multitude of his strength, he certainly would lay no false charge against me, nor make any hostile attack upon me. 7. For at his throne of grace a righteous person, such as I am, may argue the matter with him; and by this means I should fully and for ever escape condemnation, being acquitted by him as my Judge. 8, 9. I have tried all methods to obtain a fair hearing for my cause before him, but have not hitherto been able to procure it. 10. But he knows the integrity of my heart and life; and whenever I am tried at his bar I shall come off sufficiently vindicated; and it is to render me more holy and pure that he tries me in this furnace of affliction. 11. I have always, in the most fixed and steady manner, followed his pattern and guidance. I have steadfastly observed his commandments without ever words of his mouth more than my "necessary" food.

13 But he is in one mind, and "who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth.

swerving from them. 12. I have never apostatized from his doctrines nor precepts; and have more earnestly sought, more highly prized, more heartily delighted in, and more carefully stored up his words of revelation, than my necessary food, or most valuable and precious things. 13. But his purposes are unchangeable, and he immovably persists in afflicting me, and does whatever he pleases, without giving to any a reason for his conduct. 14. Whatever trouble he has intended for me he will inflict: and in his purposes and providential conduct there are many instances of deep mystery, of which, though both wise and just, we cannot see the reason. 15. In consideration of his infinite majesty and wondrous and infinite power, I am troubled at the tokens of his anger; and when I leisurely consider his hard dealings with me I am afraid of him. 16. For in his infinite power he hath quite broken and melted my heart with fiery tribulations; and I am in perpetual terror of his inflicting still heavier strokes. 17. For he keeps me still alive under these terrible troubles and perplexities, and refuses me the favour of dying by his fearful and confounding strokes.

REFLECTIONS.—Our groanings should never be heavier than our strokes. God allows us to complain of our troubles, but never to murmur at them. It is becoming for saints to be earnestly desirous of close dealing with God; and to be particular and importunate in their requests at his throne of grace. However men abuse us, God will not only deal in equity, but even in great mercy, with his people. And it is proper always to keep up kind and exalted thoughts of him. They who fly to him in distress shall find their spiritual strength increased by every application; and if he acquit us, we need neither fear nor care who condemn us. But O what dark and perplexing nights of desertion and perplexity are God's choicest saints often afflicted with! Happy are those who, amidst all, cleave to his commandments, walk uprightly in his way, and feed daily by faith on his word! Their trials shall issue to their lasting honour and advantage. But it is sad when the mystery of God's counsels, and the deep wisdom of them, the greatness of his power, and ordinary methods of providence, disquiet instead of composing our minds. Let him do what he will, he cannot but do right. However terrible he is in himself, in Christ he is infinitely engaging. Let us therefore always acquiesce in his works and delight in himself. There is no reason rashly to wish for death when God can so quickly render life a comfort to us and a service to his church.

CHAPTER XXIV. But if God always punishes the wicked in this world, as you pretend, why are not particular seasons of it fixed by him? And why do not those who are best acquainted with him observe those days of judgment of his enemies? 2. Certain it is that in this world some are notoriously covetous and unjust, and even open robbers. 3. They cruelly oppress widows and fatherless children. 4. They harass, terrify, or even imprison the meek, poor, and afflicted. 5. In the most unconcerned manner they carry on their oppressions, and by rapine and violence maintain themselves and families in the desert. 6. They reap fields and gather vintages not their own. 7, 8. They force from the poor whatever they have, till they reduce them to absolute misery, in a state similar to that of wild beasts. 9-11. While they inhumanly deprive infants of their provision, that the enslaved mothers may work, and deprive their poor underlings of the meanest necessities of life, they force them to labour in the hardest services. 12. Those whom they have oppressed, wounded, or unjustly condemned, mightily cry to God for judgment against them; yet he punishes them not, even in the slightest manner. 13. They sin impudently in the face of the sun, and against the light of nature, conscience, and revelation: they do not approve, delight in, or observe God's laws; and if at any time they stumble on a good action they quickly give it over, however easy and reasonable. 14-17. Hating the light, robbers and unclean persons, in defiance of an all-seeing God, earnestly carry on their murder and whoredom in the night season. 18. Lighter than froth, they rush on every opportunity of uncleanness or bloodshed; their inheritance is spent in the most accursed manner; and they quite disregard the management of the vineyards or other most profitable business. 19. After all the grave, in a quick and easy manner, consumes these notorious sinners. 20. Their very mothers easily forget their death, it is apparently so pleasant. Rottenness shall be sweet to them. They do not become infamous in the world, but their crimes are quickly and altogether forgotten. 21, 22. They abuse barren women, injure widows, and with great activity, craft, and cruelty oppress everybody around. 23. And though men give them presents, that they may have their protection and friendship, they still watch for opportunities to injure these dependants. 24. After being exalted a while they come to their graves as seasonably in appearance, and as easily, as their neighbours. 25. But if you will insist that the wicked are always fearfully punished in this life, I dare challenge the whole world to find me the person who can disprove the facts which I have now stated. N.B. Ver. 18-20, 23, 24, may be interpreted as a representation of the miserable state of wicked men after all their prosperity.

Ver. 5. [The wild ass—intractable, untamable, rejoicing in its freedom—is an emblem of the nomad Ishmaelite of the Arabian desert. Such too as are poor, who are driven from settled habitations by oppression, seek a refuge in the wide and free desert. It is often the case in the present day that those who are ground down by the tyranny and avarice of Turkish rulers, desert their homes in the agricultural districts of eastern Syria, and escape to the wilderness. P.—Go they forth. Who? Not the poor (ver. 4), but the unjust oppressors described in ver. 2, 3, &c., whose work becomes the robbery of the caravans in the wilderness, as it has continued downwards through all their generations. C.]

Ver. 18. [The general idea here is the quickness with which the wicked man passes away. True he may live to an old age; yet at length he must return to dust. There is no hope for him. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is no doubt but that all sin will be punished; and none can know either love or hatred by all that is before him in his outward lot. While the saints and poor, who are in the mind of God, are remarkably afflicted, the most daring sinners are often remarkably prosperous in this world. But the Lord has not forsaken the earth: he takes notice of every injury done to his children. And however long his patience may bear with the presumptuous insult of sinners to his character and government, he will resent their wickedness at last. Even when they are most secure they are least safe. Though their success promise them impunity a while, which they had marked for themselves in the day-time:² they know not the light.

17 For the morning is to them even as the shadow of death: if one know them, they are in the terrors of the shadow of death.

18 He is swift as the waters;³ their portion is cursed in the earth: he beholdeth not the way of the vineyards.⁴

19 Drought and heat consume⁵ the snow-waters; so doth the grave those which have sinned.

20 The womb shall forget him;⁶ the worm shall feed sweetly on him; he shall be no more remembered; and wickedness shall be broken as a tree.

21 He evil-entreateth the barren that beareth not; and doeth not good to the widow.

22 He draweth also the mighty with his power: he riseth up, and no man is sure of life.⁷

23 Though it be given him to be in safety, whereon he resteth; yet his eyes⁸ are upon their ways.

24 They are exalted for a little while, but are gone⁹ and brought low; they are taken out of the way as all other, and cut off as the tops of the ears of corn.²

25 And if it be not so now, who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?

and though their crimes should be concealed on earth, they will be openly discovered at last and punished for ever. Amidst the perpetration of crimes terror often seizes them; but how much more in sharing the certain, the fearful, the eternal punishment of them!

CHAPTER XXV. Bildad replied, 2. To God belongs that supreme authority over all things in heaven and earth, and that infinite majesty which strikes every beholder into solemn awe. In perfect quietness and order he rules all the luminaries in the firmament, and all the angels and glorified saints above. Why then darest thou pretend to find fault with him? 3. His creatures are absolutely innumerable to us, and every one shares of his light, his benefits of nature or grace;—why then contend with him? 4. And how then can a poor wretched man stand as righteous before God? And he that is born of a sinful woman be pure before him? 5. In his view the bright luminaries of heaven are spotted and dark. 6. How mean and vile then must the frail and dying children of a corrupted progenitor and federal head be in his sight!

Ver. 6. [This closing speech of Bildad is beautiful and true, but it does not touch the point at issue. The friends had argued that Job was punished because of his sin—his sin was great, though concealed beneath a cloak of hypocrisy, therefore his punishment was great. In reply Job affirmed a great fact, namely, that the ungodly often live happily and prosperously; and from this he argues with conclusive force that punishment does not always overtake the sinner. Consequently the fact of his being greatly afflicted was no certain proof of his having grievously sinned. P.—Worm. This word rather signifies a maggot, a creature bred of corruption. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—After long and hot disputing, people often come to see that there was less difference between them than they thought. Job's friends were obliged to acknowledge that wicked persons might prosper for a time, and Job owned that they would be destroyed at last. It was a great mercy for religious disputants to have their hearts always filled with awful thoughts of God and humble thoughts of themselves. But how infinite is the condescension of God to hold fellowship with men, so mean, so loathsome! Let me never forget how JEHOVAH assumed my nature, and in it, for me, became a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people! What manner of love hath the Father bestowed on us in thus sending forth his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, that we, sinful worms, might, through his blood, become the sons of God!

CHAPTER XXVI. To this Job, in a derisive manner, answered, 2, 3. To what purpose serve these hints, either to support the cause of the Almighty, or to direct him in his government of the world, or to comfort a dispirited and instruct an ignorant soul? Who can be a whit bettered by aught you have so confidently uttered, that is quite foreign to the point in hand? 4. Do you imagine that I need to be instructed in these points? or that you, as one inspired of God, can by such hints revive and refresh my spirit? 5. I myself can discourse to far better purpose concerning God. While terrible monsters, minerals, pearl, coral, and the like, are formed in the bottom of the sea or heart of the earth, and fishes and animals on the surface of it, the departed ghosts tremble and travail in pain in the deep and dark regions of misery. 6. The whole state of the dead, whether of soul or body, is perfectly obvious to God's all-seeing eye; and all the depths and miseries of hell are perpetually visible to him. 7. He spreads the heavens over the apparently empty regions of air; and so balances the earth by his power, that it hangs like a ball in the air supported by nothing. 8. He binds up large collections of water in the clouds (by which he covers his glory, and on which he rides in majesty) as in firm bags, till he please to make them distil in dew, rain, snow, or hail. 9. He conceals his own glorious abodes; he firmly fixes the visible heavens, and spreads his veiling collection of clouds over them, to conceal his glory and restrain the scorching beams of the sun. 10. Everywhere, while the revolutions of day and night continue, he has fixed the shores and boundaries of the sea, that, rage as it will, it cannot exceed them. 11. The lofty mountains, which seem the supporting pillars of heaven, tremble and shake when he corrects men by earthquakes, thunders, or tempests. 12. By his power he tosses the sea into a terrible fury, and as it were divides it into ridges and mountainous billows; and by his wise government he again calms it at pleasure, and mortally wounds the crocodiles and other proud monsters which inhabit it. 13. By the influence of his Holy Spirit he at first adorned the heavens by his power; he formed the Milky Way and all their winding constellations. By CHAPTER XXV.

Bildad asserteth the sovereignty of God, before whom man cannot be justified.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said, 2 Dominion^a and fear are with him; he maketh peace in his high places.¹

3 Is there any number of his armies? and upon whom doth not his light arise?²

4 How then can man be justified with God? or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?

5 Behold even to the moon, and it shineth not; yea, the stars are not pure in his sight:

6 How much less man, that is a worm; and the son of man, which is a worm?

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Job, reproving the uncharitable spirit of Bildad, 5 acknowledgeth the power of God to be infinite and unsearchable.

BUT Job answered and said, 2 How hast thou helped him that is without power?¹ how savest thou the arm that hath no strength?

3 How hast thou counselled him that hath no wisdom? and how hast thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

4 To whom hast thou uttered words? and whose spirit came from thee?

5 Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof.

his wind he clears up the sky; and his almighty power strikes prostrate the most direful and destructive monsters of sea or land. 14. Nay, behold, these are but the outlines and a very small parcel of his works. It is but very little that we either hear or know concerning him; but the thunder-like declarations of his prevailing, his infinite excellency, who can comprehend?

Ver. 5. [The mighty dead (the giants of the antediluvian world, Ge. 6. 4) are laid open from below, and the (living) inhabitants thereof 'are naked before God.' C.—Job's object in this sublime speech is to show that his view of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God is far more comprehensive than that of Bildad. God's dominion is not confined to the heavens, it extends to the grave, to the world of spirits:—in universal nature, in fact, Jehovah reigns supreme. P.]

Ver. 13. ['By his Spirit (his creative, omnipotent Spirit) the heavens are beautiful,' i.e. it was the Spirit's work which made them so. P.—The crooked serpent. The zodiac, whose constellations mark the apparent annual place of the sun in the heavens. C.—Others think reference is made either to the constellation of the Dragon, which lies between the Greater and Lesser Bears, and winds round a great part of the Polar Circle; others, again, suppose the Milky Way is meant. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Sometimes self-conceited persons may be ridiculed out of their notions when reasoning is not effectual: and in disputes much is ordinarily said that is not to the present purpose; and not the edification of their neighbour, but victory over him, is the great aim of the disputants. Little is it remembered, that not the displays of God's highness, but of his grace in Christ, can give ease to a wounded spirit. But it is happy when disputes end in men's glorifying God with one mind and one mouth. The perfections of the Deity are plainly marked in all his works of nature and grace; and all things must be well done where God himself is the sole or principal agent. Let me therefore in all behold his hand, his face. If he conceal the glories of his throne from this lower world, let me walk by faith, not by sight. If he has garnished the heavens, let me set my affections on things above and not on things of the earth. If his perfections are unsearchable, let me always admire and adore him.

CHAPTER XXVII. None offering to speak, Job continued his substantial but dark and mysterious dis-

13 By his Spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked serpent.

11 The blessings which the wicked possess are sometimes turned into curses.

MOREOVER, Job continued¹ his parable,² and said,

2 As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgment,³ and the Almighty, who hath vexed my soul;

3 All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils;

4 My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit.

5 God forbid that I should justify you: till I die I will not remove mine integrity from me.

6 My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live.⁴

7 Let mine enemy be as the wicked, and he that riseth up against me as the unrighteous.

It is mine enemies and opposers whom God will condemn and punish as wicked. And indeed I could wish nothing worse to my greatest enemy and injurer than to be wicked. So much I detest it. 8. For what avails the firmest hopes of a hypocrite in his covetously-gained prosperity, or even in warlike tranquillity of soul, when he comes to die? 9. Will God always hear his prayers in the time of trouble and death? 10. Or will he find comfort in God when the world affords none? or will he in prosperity, as well as in adversity, continue in the earnest worship and service of God? 11. REFLECTIONS.—Appeals to God ought to be necessary, deliberate, serious, and in matters of importance. Prevarication or concealment is as much perjury before God as direct falsehood asserted. But how often our high praises of God are mingled with something unkindly and disparaging! Not our most solemn vows, but Jesus' blood and Spirit, must chiefly maintain our purity of conscience and integrity of life. And while he enables to exercise a conscience void of offence towards God and men, we ought never to believe either devils or men suggesting that we are hypocrites. But it is best to refute the calumnies cast upon us by living well. Miserable indeed are hypocrites, whose hopes will never be crowned with enjoyment, their prayers never accepted nor graciously answered, and whose religion is neither comfortable nor constant! And yet, alas! how many such, amidst a glare of profession, continue with hearts unrenewed! Miserable is the condition of the wicked, even at its best, in this life: and what then must it be in hell? When once dead, their riches strangely vanish, and even fall into the hands of the godly, whom they hated: nor is any habitation secure and lasting but that which is not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And in the most alarming forms of death God often ushers wicked men into eternal fire.

CHAPTER XXVIII. No wonder that I cannot tell you the reasons why God punishes some wicked men in this world and not all, when, after all our researches, we have so scanty a knowledge of natural things. There are secret mines for the silver, and a country for gold, which men melt and refine. 2. And iron is, with art and labour, dragged from the dust, and stones are melted into brass; 3. The miners, in the most earnest and daring manner, dig till they have quite lost the light of day, and bring their ore from the dark caverns of the earth, where pestilential damps and other dangers often prove mortal. 4. While, with infinite labour, they drain off the springs that disturb them, they break into veins of metal about the bottom of mountains; and, unheeded by the men who walk above them, they wander in the dark bowels of the earth. 5, 6. While the surface of the ground produces herbs and corn for food to animals; lime, brimstone, and such other combustibles are found in its bowels; nay, the most precious stones and gold in some parts of it. 7, 8. So mysterious are the passages of these miners that the most quick-sighted fowls never looked into them, and the most fierce and courageous animals never dared to enter them. 9. But the miners artfully cut their way through rocks of flint, and dig to the bottoms of mountains, to come at the precious metals. 10. They make passages for draining off the water that breaks in upon them, and cleave asunder the veins of ore, and earnestly discover the precious stones and metals. 11. They stop the springs from overflowing their mine, turning them another way, and bring up these precious gems or metals which had been long sealed up in the heart of the earth. 12. But to find out solid wisdom, or obtain the knowledge of God's reasons in his providential conduct, is still more difficult. 13. God hath so disposed it that no man knows the order, method, or importance of his procedure; and no man on earth can attain to it. 14. No search into the depths of the earth or sea can procure it. 15-19. Not all the precious metals or gems in the world can purchase it. 20, 21. No, not the most quick-sighted creatures on earth can point out a method to obtain it. 22. The solid consideration of death and hell are a proper introduction to true wisdom; and yet in death and damnation there are manifold instances of God's wise procedure which are not sufficiently comprehended in the reasons of them. 23-27. God alone—who is infinite in wisdom and knowledge, and who rules and governs all things for the best—who manages winds, waters, rains, and thunders in all their circumstances, degree, time, place, or form—properly understands the reasons of whatever he does, particularly his dealings with men. 28. But what he inculcates and bestows upon men as their proper wisdom is such a knowledge and filial awe of his unbounded excellencies, as makes them to flee to him as their only refuge and portion; and, hating everything sinful, to love him and keep his commandments.

Ver. 1. [The general scope of this address on mining operations is well indicated by Delitzsch:—'According to the most natural connection Job desires to show that the final lot of the rich man is well merited, because the treasures which he made the object of his avarice and pride, though ever so costly, are still earthly in their nature and origin.' It is interesting to inquire where Job got his knowledge of mining. There is monumental evidence that mining operations were carried on in the peninsula of Sinai long before the exodus. The remains of smelting furnaces, the dwellings of the miners, the temples they erected, and the works they undertook, may be seen on the spot to this day; and they are testimonies to the scientific acquirements and enterprising spirit of some great primeval nation. With these or kindred works Job must have been acquainted. P.]

Ver. 4. [Delitzsch's translation of this difficult passage is as follows:—'He breaketh away a shaft from those who tarry above; there, forgotten by every foot, they hang and swing far from men.' Allusion is manifestly made to the operations of the miner, especially in the copper-mines. 'The shaft' is the perpendicular aperture to the mine. Down it the miners are let by a rope, on which they hang and swing unseen by those above. P.]

Ver. 5. [That is, the surface of the earth is heaved up and tossed by the operations of the miner, just as volcanic fire heaves up a mountain. P.]

Ver. 11. [Bindeth the floods. It is probable the reference of Job is to the ingenious methods and gigantic efforts whereby mines were drained in his days; but of the literal binding of the floods, many parts of the Low Countries of the European continent, rescued by embankment from the sea, afford the most striking examples. Roberts in his Illustrations refers the greater part of this chapter to the eastern works for irrigation; but we can see no good reason for supposing them so obscurely combined with the evident reference to mining. See ver. 1, 2. C.]

Ver. 25. [The writer here refers to those great fixed laws which regulate all physical nature. These laws are divine in origin. God appointed them. He appointed to the wind the measure of its force; he distributed the seas and oceans by measure; he appointed to the rains, the lightning, and the thunder their laws. God thus rules the world in every department. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how men rack their wits, and toil their members, to obtain riches, which, while enjoyed, are unsubstantial, and which quickly take to themselves wings and fly away, as an eagle towards heaven! Why are we not more industrious in digging for Jesus' hidden treasures, which answer all things and endure for ever! Surely Jesus and his mysteries, Jesus and his grace, must be strangely mistaken when men can thus prefer created trifles and rarities of dust! But how great is that God whose eye overlooks all, whose power effects all, whose purpose rules all things! Let me never dare to pry into his private counsels, whereby he regulates his conduct. Let me leave the secrets of other men's hearts and the deep mysteries of providence to the Lord. And let me and my children study what he has revealed to us as the standard of our faith and practice. Let us learn the wisdom which comes from above, which is pure and peaceable, manifested in fearing the Lord and departing from evil.

24 For 'he looketh to the ends of the earth, and seeth under the whole heaven;

25 To 'make the weight^s for the winds; and he weigheth the waters by measure.

26 When 'he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder:

27 Then did he see it, and 'declare it; he prepared it, yea, and searched it out.

28 And 'unto man he said, Behold, 'the fear of the LORD, 'that is wisdom; and to 'depart from evil is understanding.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Job calleth to mind his former prosperity and honour, and the worthy use he had made of it.

MOREOVER, Job 'continued his parable, and said,

2 Oh that I were as in 'months past, as in the days when God preserved me;

3 When his 'candle shined upon my head,¹ and when by his light I walked through darkness;

4 As I was in the days of my youth, when the 'secret of God² was upon my tabernacle;

5 When the 'Almighty was yet with me, when 'my children were about me;

6 When 'I washed my steps with butter, and the rock poured me³ out rivers of oil;⁴

7 When I went out 'to the gate through the city; when I prepared my seat in the street!

8 The young men saw me, and 'hid themselves; and the aged 'arose, and stood up.

9 The princes 'refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth.

10 The nobles held their peace,⁵ and their tongue 'cleaved to the roof of their mouth.⁶

11 When^a the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me:

12 Because 'I delivered the poor that cried,

CHAPTER XXX.

1 Job's honour is turned into extreme contempt. 15 His prosperity into the deepest distress.

BUT now they that are younger¹ than I 'have me in derision, whose fathers I would have 'disdained to have set with the dogs of my² flock.

CHAPTER XXIX. After another pause, Job proceeded in his spirited vindication of himself, saying, 2. O that God would re-establish me in my former prosperity of person, family, and estate, as in the days wherein he watched over and protected me! 3. When his blessing and favour directed and prospered me in all my affairs, and made me to pass untouched through all the troubles and inconveniences of life, and the various dangers, difficulties, and calamities which befel others around me. 4. When I was in the days of my ripe prosperity, and had the authority, the oracles, and secrets of God with me; 5. When God Almighty continued so kind to and familiar with me, and my children and servants were round about me; 6. When whithersoever I turned myself I abounded in all sorts of the choicest blessings; 7. When I took my seat in the places of judicature and concourse, 8. The young men stood in the most profound awe of me, and the aged stood up in reverence and ceased to speak. 9, 10. Nay, from a regard to my superior authority, princes, the most noble not excepted, refrained from speaking. 11. They who heard me judge in a cause pronounced me highly favoured of God, and richly endowed with his gifts and grace, and prayed for his distinguished blessings upon me: and they who observed my just procedure attested my pious, just, and blameless conversation; 12. Because I never failed to redress the grievances of poor, fatherless, and destitute persons who complained to me. 13. Many blessed me as the instrument of delivering them when they were upon the point of being ruined by false accusations; and I caused the widow's heart to sing with joy for her great and unexpected deliverances, and the favours which I granted her. 14. In all my sentences I fixed my attention on what was just and upright: and the decisions I gave were an honour to me. 15. I instructed, directed, and assisted such as could not manage their own affairs; and was ever ready to help and comfort such as could not help themselves. 16. I was a kind teacher, provider, and protector to the poor; and carefully inquired into their circumstances, as well as into their difficult and obscure pleas. 17. By proper punishments and restraints I rendered the wicked incapable of oppressing, and forced them to restore that which they had violently extorted. 18. Then I vainly imagined that, after a long life of amazing prosperity, I should die quietly in my own house among my children and friends; 19. That my remarkable happiness should certainly continue, as I had every mean of preserving and securing it; 20. That the honour and respect which I had from others, and my abilities and powers, should still continue with me; 21, 22. That men should still regard my advices and decisions with the profoundest respect; 23. That they should always be exceedingly desirous to hear my opinion and judgment on a point; 24. That, though I carried myself familiarly towards them, they should still stand in awe, and carefully avoid everything which might deprive them of my favour; 25. And that I should still be regarded as their principal director in their conduct, and affectionate comforter under their troubles.

N.B. Ver. 20-25 may also be read in the past tense, as in our translation.

Ver. 7. [Seat. His seat for the administration of justice in the forum or market-place. C.—Not only in his own house, or on his own property among his own servants and retainers, was he respected and honoured; but even when he went to the city, and took his accustomed place in the public market, all men honoured him as a prince. P.]

Ver. 24. [If I laughed on them, they believed it not. 'If I smiled upon them they became not confident; that is, my utmost familiarity never bred contempt; a result ever difficult to attain, and requiring the most exact tempering of affection with firmness, of condescension with dignity, and of rebuke with tenderness—a result of which polish may produce an imitation, while grace alone can exhibit the original. C.]

Ver. 25. [There is an amount of self-glorification in this passage which would be offensive in western society. The customs and feelings of the East, however, are very different from ours. Such language as this would not be considered egotistic when uttered by eastern magnates. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—What holiness, comfort, and honour God bestows upon all believers when it is for his glory and their good! But those who prosper in youth know little what dark and cloudy days may be in reserve for them. It is pleasant, however, to commemorate our early intimacies with God, and his kind protection of us, or communications of light, life, and comfort to our heart: and if they be lost, God allows us to pray for the restoration of our mercies, spiritual and temporal. Faith in God, and intimate fellowship with him, remarkably contribute to render men truly honourable and useful in this world. And it is comely

2 Yea, whereto might the strength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was perished?

3 For want and famine they were solitary; fleeing into the wilderness in former time desolate and waste:

4 Who cut up mallows by the bushes, and juniper-roots for their meat.

5 They were driven forth from among men, (they cried after them as after a thief.)

6 To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys, in caves of the earth, and in the rocks.

7 Among the bushes they brayed; under the nettles they were gathered together.

8 They were children of fools, yea, children of base men: they were viler than the earth.

9 And now am I their song; yea, I am their by-word.

10 They abhor me, they flee far from me, and spare not to spit in my face.

11 Because he hath loosed my cord, and afflicted me, they have also let loose the bridle before me.

12 Upon my right hand rise the youth; they push away my feet, and they raise up against me the ways of their destruction.

13 They mar my path; they set forward my calamity; they have no helper.

14 They came upon me as a wide breaking-in of waters: in the desolation they rolled themselves upon me.

15 Terrors are turned upon me: they pursue my soul as the wind; and my welfare passeth away as a cloud.

16 And now my soul is poured out upon me; the days of affliction have taken hold upon me.

17 My bones are pierced in me in the night-season: and my sinews take no rest.

18 By the great force of my disease is my garment changed: it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat.

19 He hath cast me into the mire, and I am become like dust and ashes.

20 I cry unto thee, and thou dost not hear me; I stand up, and thou regardest me not.

21 Thou art become cruel to me: with thy strong hand thou opposest thyself against me.

22 Thou liftest me up to the wind; thou causest me to ride upon it, and dissolvest my substance.

23 For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house appointed for all living.

24 Howbeit he will not stretch out his hand to the grave, though they cry in his destruction.

25 Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? was not my soul grieved for the poor?

26 When I looked for good, then evil came unto me; and when I waited for light, there came darkness.

27 My bowels boiled, and rested not; the days of affliction prevented me.

28 I went mourning without the sun; I stood up, and I cried in the congregation.

29 I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls.

30 My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat.

31 My harp also is turned to mourning, and my organ into the voice of them that weep.

in a state when judges are grave, solemn and impartial helpers to the poor, and terrors to the oppressors; and when people are modest, submissive, and grateful: but when men have great wealth at home, and are regarded as the oracle, the darling sovereign, and comforter of their country, how apt are they to suppose their felicity secured, and to forget the evil day!

CHAP. XXX. But now, alas! the youths, who durst scarcely look me in the face, mock and deride me, even those whose infamous parents I would have disdained to have employed in attending my dogs, or in other of the vilest services; 2. Being indeed so lazy, listless, and weak, that it was in vain to employ them in anything, after they had lived so long abandoning themselves to wickedness; 3-8. Base and beggarly fellows, who, ashamed of their poverty, and to prevent the punishment of their wickedness, had fled into deserts; and there, like wild beasts, lived upon roots and herbs, and lodged in dens, caves, and bushes. 9. But now they triumph over me, and make my calamities the subject of their songs and merry conversation. 10. Heartily abhorring me, they disdain to come near me, unless it be contemptuously to spit in my face. 11. Because God has deprived me of my authority, wealth, and honour, and has grievously afflicted me, they take an unrestrained liberty in their insolent behaviour towards me. 12. The very boys place themselves as my accusers; they insolently abuse me; and attempt, by different methods, to destroy me. 13. They endeavour to obstruct all means of comfort and relief to me. They so disturb my mind that I know not what to do. Without having or needing any assistance, they in the most presumptuous manner increase my calamities. 14. With the most furious and destructive violence they assault me; and when God has deprived me of my substance, family and health, they insult me in the most noisy forms. 15. Terrors directed by God against me, seize upon me in the most violent and irresistible manner; and my abundant prosperity is quickly, in a moment, over and gone. 16. By reason of my terrible afflictions my courage and resolution are quite exhausted, and the powers of my soul so wasted that I can do nothing but melt into tears and faint away with grief. 17. In the night, when others rest, my bones are, as it were, pierced and bruised with pain; and the worms, terrors, and agonies that torment me never take rest. 18. By their fearful force my boils, which cover me all over, are like an outer garment to me, and gird me round about; and their filthy matter stains my clothes, and glues them fast to my skin, that I can scarcely get them changed. 19. I am fearfully plunged into filthy troubles. My foul sores render me like dust and ashes, and reduce me to the point of death. 20. When I present myself before thee, O God, and continue instant in the most fervent supplications, thou dost but condemn me. 21, 22. Acting as an implacable enemy to me, thou exercisest thy almighty power to destroy me. Thou liftest me up to the wind of thy judgment, and makest me to ride upon it as stubble driven to and fro. My body is consumed by the violence of my trouble; and my firmest things are made to reel as the waters of the sea tossed with a storm. 23. Truly by thy thus dealing with me I see that I need look for nothing but death and the grave, that common sanctuary of mankind. 24. And I hope God will neither exert his almighty power to rescue me from the grave, nor let me in my passage cry out of pains, let friends entreat for my life as they will; nor use it to molest me there, but give me refreshing ease in the state of the dead. 25. Did not I always sympathize with others in their distress and poverty? And do not I now weep as one condemned to a period of trouble? Does not my soul, as a poor distressed object, pine away with grief? 26. For when I firmly expected great and lasting prosperity terrible miseries came upon me. 27. How insupportable are the inward torments of my body and the anguish of my soul! Days of fearful affliction have rushed upon me before I was aware. 28. I spend my days without any comfort; and sadness makes me quite unconcerned about light or any other agreeable object. My trouble forces me to cry out, be as many around me as will. 29. I can do nothing but seek to be alone, and hiss and howl over my dreadful case. 30. The hot moisture of my boils has rendered my skin black, and has inflamed all my bones. 31. All my joy and mirth are laid aside; and nothing but weeping and wailing are come in their stead.

Ver. 2. [In whom old age (untaught by experience) had become profligate.—Note. However melancholy be the sight of a thoughtless young man, still there is hope that time may teach him a better lesson; but of an abandoned old man, lost to all experience, what can we hope? Grace alone can teach either the young or the old; but the aged sinner is surely the more frightful picture. C.]

Ver. 24. [The 'stretching out' of God's hand, signifies his afflictive judgments. See Is. 9. 12, 17, 21. They will not pursue to the grave. C.]

Ver. 31. [That is, of them that weep for the dead. Of the plaintive and doleful cries for the dead, eastern travellers assure us that Europeans can form no conception without the actual hearing. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Unsubstantial, uncertain, and transient are all things but God and the spiritual blessings of his blessed word. But sin, even on earth, makes many the most base and miserable of wretches; the youngest in age, the meanest in extraction, the poorest in property, and the most scandalous in character, are generally the most ready to condemn, insult, CHAPTER XXXI.

Job maketh a solemn protestation of his integrity in several duties.

I MADE^a a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?^b

2 For ^bwhat portion of God is there from above?¹ and ^{what} inheritance of the Almighty from on high?

3 Is^c not destruction to the wicked? and a strange ^{punishment} to the workers of iniquity?

4 Doth^d not he see my ways, and count all my steps?

5 If^e I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath hastened to deceit;

6 Let^f me be weighed in an even balance, that God may know mine integrity.

7 If^g my step hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes,² and if any blot hath cleaved to mine hands;

8 Then^h let me sow, and let another eat; yea, let my offspring be rooted out.

9 If mine heart have been deceived by a woman,³ or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door;

10 Then let my wife ^{grind} unto another,⁴ and let others bow down upon her.

11 For this is an heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be ^{punished} by the judges.

12 For it is a ^{fire} that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all mine increase.

13 If I ^{did} despise the cause of my manservant or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me;

14 What then shall I do when ^{God} riseth up?⁵ and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him?

15 Didⁱ not he that made me in the womb make him? and did not one fashion us in the womb?⁶

16 If I have ^{withheld} the poor from ^{their} desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail;

17 Or have ^{eaten} my morsel myself alone,⁷ and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof;

18 (For from my youth ^{he} was brought up with me, as ^{with} a father, and I have guided her⁸ from my mother's womb),⁹ and abuse the greatest and best, when Providence once frowns upon them. And it is hard for wounded spirits to bear up under complicated troubles, terrors of mind, loathsome and painful diseases of body, and frowns of God. But happy are they who can by faith take up the eternal enjoyment of God as a full balance to all the troubles which they can suffer on earth! Happy are they who have the testimony of a good conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity they have had their conversation in this world!

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 6. Let me be tried by an upright impartial judge, that God may acknowledge and approve mine integrity. 7, 8. If I have knowingly, willingly, and ordinarily wandered out of the way of my duty, have indulged my heart in covetousness or lust, or my hands in bribery and injustice, let all that I have be bestowed on others, and my children, plants, and trees be rooted up. 9, 10. If I have been enticed to unclean lust by any woman, or if I have watched for opportunities to defile my neighbour's bed, let my own wife be a slave and a whore to others. 26, 27. If I have beheld the sun or moon with any idolatrous regard, or have had any inward inclination to esteem them as deities, or have given them any external worship. 34. Did ever fear of men terrify me from candid confession of my sin or from any other duty? or if I have concealed my faults, let me be overwhelmed with the terror and contempt of men till I be ashamed to be seen. 35-37. O that I had but an impartial judge, and that my accuser would give me a written charge! I should prize it as an honour, since every article would then be proved false: I would, with undaunted courage and confidence of success, give a candid account of my past conduct, to see of what they would accuse me.

Ver. 1. [Job was charged with the commission of secret sins. His friends alleged that he would not have been so heavily punished had he not been guilty of grievous offences. In reply Job reviews his whole conduct, both public and private. He enters into parti-

20 If ^{his} loins have not blessed me, and if he were ^{not} warmed with the fleece of my sheep;

21 If I have ^{lifted} up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate:

22 Then^j let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the ^{bone}.

23 For ^{destruction} from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his ^{highness} I could not endure.

24 If I ^{have} made gold my hope, or have said to the fine gold, ^{Thou art} my ^{confidence};

25 If I ^{rejoiced} because my wealth was great, and because mine hand had gotten ^{much};

26 If ^I beheld the sun⁴ when it shined, or the moon walking in ^{brightness};

27 And my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth⁷ hath ^{kissed} my hand;⁸

28 This also ^{were} ^{an iniquity} to be ^{punished} by the judge: for I should have ^{denied} the God that is above.

29 If I ^{rejoiced} at the destruction of him that hated me, or lifted up myself when evil found him;

30 (Neither have I suffered my mouth⁹ to sin, by wishing ^a curse to his soul;)

31 If^k the men of my tabernacle said not, Oh that we had of his flesh!¹ we cannot be satisfied:

32 The ^{stranger} did not lodge in the street: ^{but} I opened my doors to the traveller;²

33 If I covered my transgressions as ^{Adam}, by hiding ^{mine} iniquity in my bosom:

34 Did ^I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrify me, that I kept silence, and went not out of the door?⁴

35 Oh^l that one would hear me! behold, my desire is, that the Almighty would answer ^{me}, and that mine adversary had written a book:⁶

36 Surely I would take it ^{upon} my shoulder, and bind it as a crown to me:

37 I ^{would} declare unto him the number of my steps; as a prince would I go near unto him.

11 Behold, I waited for your words; I gave ear to your reasons,⁵ whilst ye searched out what to say.⁶

12 Yea, ¹I attended unto you; and, behold, ²there was none of you that convinced Job, or that answered his words;

13 Lest¹ ye should say, We have found out wisdom: ²'God thrusteth him down, not man.⁷

14 Now he hath not directed ¹his ²words against me: neither will I answer him with your speeches.

15 They were amazed; they answered no more; they left off speaking.⁹

17 I said, I will answer also my part; I also will show mine opinion.

18 For I am full of ¹'matter;² the spirit within ³me ⁴'constraineth me.

19 Behold, my belly ¹is as wine ²which hath no vent;⁴ it is ready to burst like ³'new bottles.⁵

20 I will speak, that I may be refreshed.⁶ I will open my lips and answer.

mark to the legal instruments in the cause, and he means that he would gladly affix his signature to articles of impeachment laid against him, in token of his desire to debate the question of his own integrity' (Wordsworth). Job feels strong in the consciousness of his innocence. He has now put the three friends to silence; and he makes a general appeal to any one who will hear him. He boldly appeals to God himself to try and judge him. Seeing only with human eye, comparing himself only with a human standard, Job forgets man's frail and guilty nature. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How diversified are the forms in which inward corruption breaks forth among mankind! And there is great need of purifying the heart, of solemn dedication to God, of watchfulness over both soul and senses, and of constant, awful, and engaging impressions of God, to promote a holy and circumspect life. It is highly honourable to be followers of those ancient patriarchs who through faith and patience inherited the promises. But, alas! that many things, by them held horrid and detestable, are now become common and fashionable!—What dangerous enemies to our souls are fleshly lusts! And they call for especial watchfulness. If we would keep our heart pure our eye must be single. However unexceptionable our outward conduct appear, there is a God who marks our secret sins; and no impurity of temper can consist with the enjoyment of him. Such as will lodge sin in their heart now must lodge in hell for ever. How rare truly honest men are in this world! None are more to be suspected of fraud than such as are full of talk in their worldly dealings. Honesty needs no varnish. The gains of covetousness, however secret, leave a blot in the sight of God, which nothing but Jesus' atoning blood can wash away. The fruits of injustice must either be restored or they will damn us: and they who are conscious of integrity never shun a trial. What a crying sin is adultery; and how damning!—Great humanity and tenderness is due to servants and the poor, who have the same Maker and God as ourselves: and there is great need of grace to wean our heart from this world and from every rival of God. It is a hard task to forgive injuries without reluctance. But to rejoice in the fall of an enemy is malicious and murderous. The greatest provocation will never justify our revenge. Hypocritically to hide our sins is destructive to our souls. And it is very dangerous to be partakers with other men in their sins. Let us therefore avoid the fear of man, which causeth a snare. Let us never hear a good cause run down without vindicating it, nor see injustice committed without remonstrating against it. In all our conduct let us study to approve ourselves unto God.

CHAPTER XXXII. Ver. 1. He was resolutely bent to justify himself, let them say what they would. 2. He insisted too much upon his own vindication. Yea, not without reflecting upon the severity of God. 7, 8. Old men ought to instruct their inferiors in age in the matters of God. But I find that, whatever advantage old age may give for knowledge and experience, it is chiefly men's own rational soul, and the inspiring Spirit of God, which qualify them to apprehend the mysteries of religion and providence. 13. Lest you should think you have said all that needs to be said in the cause, and that God's immediate strokes upon Job are an evidence that he is a hypocrite.—14. Job hath given me no provocation to speak; nor will I use such weak reasoning and provoking language as you have done.—21. Do not expect that I should flatter you in your errors and mistakes out of respect to your age, gravity, or the like; for I am resolved to deal freely, plainly, and impartially with you.

Ver. 1. [The first three verses of this chapter are introductory. They explain the appearance of the new speaker upon the scene. Elihu, as it appears, had heard the whole controversy—alike the charges brought against Job and his reply. He observed both the illogical reasoning and its effect. Job was confirmed in his high idea of his integrity, while the friends were silenced. Elihu waited to the end of the discussion in hopes of hearing something calculated to convince Job of his real error. It was in vain. He heard nothing. The three friends failed to reply to Job; and Job justified himself in the sight of God. P.]

Ver. 8. [But the Spirit in man it is, and the inspiration of the Almighty, that giveth him understanding. Whatever opinion may be entertained regarding the person and character of Elihu, there can be no doubt that he here lays claim to divine inspiration. He acknowledges that all wisdom must come from God. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—In angry disputes there is ordinarily much to reprove on both sides. But when the disputants are warm they are loath to own that they have lost the cause. Yet it is much better to say nothing than to talk error and nonsense. When we have fault to find, it should be done before men, not behind their backs. A gracious heart is jealous for the honour of God, and cannot, unmoved, see him slighted. And it is highly commendable to show a holy indignation against sin and warmth in the cause of truth. In disputes it is proper that each should speak in his own order, and that each be animated by a true and discreet zeal for God. And it is extremely agreeable when great sense and courage are directed by great humility and modesty. In matters of doubtful disputation we ought to be diffident of our own judgment, and to be more swift to hear than to speak. Yet after we have given others a long and patient hearing it is but reasonable that we should be heard in our turn. And by-standers, who hear without prejudice, often see further into a dispute than those who have their minds blinded by passion. God deals very sove-

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 Elihu offereth himself instead of God, with sincerity and meekness, to reason with Job. 8 He excuseth God from giving man an account of his ways, by his greatness. 14 God calleth man to repentance by visions, 19 by afflictions, 23 and by his ministers. 31 He inviteth Job to attention.

WHEREFORE, Job, I pray thee, ¹hear my speeches, and hearken to all my words.

2 Behold, now ¹I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath spoken in my mouth.¹

3 My words shall be of the ²'uprightness' of my heart; and my lips shall ³'utter knowledge clearly.'

4 The ⁴'Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

5 If thou canst answer me, set thy words in order before me, stand up.

6 Behold, ⁵'I am according to thy wish' in God's stead;⁵ I also am formed out of the clay.⁶

7 Behold, ⁶'my terror shall not make thee afraid, neither shall my hand be heavy upon thee.

8 Surely thou hast spoken ⁷'in mine hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, saying.

9 I am ⁸'clean without transgression, I am innocent; neither is there iniquity in me.

10 Behold ⁹'he findeth occasions against me, he counteth me for his enemy;

11 He ¹⁰'putteth my feet in the stocks, he marketh all my paths.'

12 Behold, in this thou art 'not just: I will answer thee, that 'God is greater than man.'

13 Why ¹¹'dost thou strive against him? for he ¹²'giveth not account' of any of his matters.

14 For ¹³'God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not.

21 His ⁸'flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen; and his bones that were not seen stick out.

22 Yea, his soul ⁹'draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers.

23 If there be a ¹⁰'messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to show unto man his uprightness;

reignly in the disposal of knowledge or other gifts. Men may have rational souls and yet know little: but they ought to cultivate this distinguished privilege. All the wisdom of fallen men in spiritual matters is but darkness till the Spirit of God enlighten their mind.—And, alas! how often disputes are closed before the question be rightly stated or impartially handled! And hence the issue is so seldom a seeing eye to eye in the truth. They have therefore good right to speak who can set the cause of truth in a more convincing and striking light than had been formerly done. And they who speak for God ought to be earnest in their discourses, inflamed with zeal for his glory and the good of souls; and to be so impressed with his perfections and laws as to regard neither the fear nor the favour of men.

CHAPTER XXXIII. Ver. 3. I shall not speak from passion or prejudice, as others have done before me; but from a sincere desire of doing thee good, and in such a clear manner that thou mayest be fully convinced of the truth of what I say. 4-6. I am a man like thyself, fit to reason with thee on equal terms, and inclined to plead the cause of God against thee. 7. There is nothing about me to terrify or torment thee. 8-11. Nor do I intend to charge thee with hypocrisy, but with uttering of self-justifying language, dishonourable to God, as if he had dealt more severely than was just with thee. 12, 13. Let thy former life be as holy and unblamable as it will, yet thou art certainly culpable in quarrelling with the dispensations of God, who is infinitely superior to thee in every respect, and accountable to none for his conduct. 14-18. Nay, so dull are men that, when God takes repeated pains in dreams, visions, or the like, to instruct them effectually for their humiliation and eternal salvation, they do not take notice of, or do not understand, his meaning. 19-22. Hence, for their awakening to a proper attention, he severely afflicts them, till they are brought to the very point of death. 23, 24. If then, by the instruction of some faithful minister, and especially by the instruction of Jesus Christ, the unparalleled Angel and Interpreter of the new kingdom, the afflicted man be brought, not only to discern the equity of God in afflicting him, but to discern, and by faith apply, Jesus' blessed righteousness to himself, God intimates to his soul a full and free redemption through that all-inclusive atonement. 25, 26. In consequence hereof not only the man's body and mind recover their wonted health and alacrity, but he is enabled, with boldness and success, to pour forth his requests before God, who allows him the comfortable sense and gracious reward of that righteousness imparted to or implanted in him. 27, 28. While God exactly observes, the man, all influenced by cordial gratitude, shall publicly confess his sinfulness of heart and life, and that the due reward of his deeds has never been rendered unto him; and shall profess his full assurance of faith, that God has redeemed him by the mighty power of his Son's blood, and will bestow his fulness of grace and glory upon him.

Ver. 3. [It appears to me that Elihu here contrasts his own motives and form of address with those of the three friends who had preceded him. They spake ignorantly, bitterly, and reproachfully; Elihu, on the other hand, addresses Job in words of well-meaning kindness and sincerity. Delitzsch translates the verse thus:—'Sincere as my heart are my utterances, and knowledge that is pure my lips declare.' P.]

Ver. 4. [The twofold nature of man is here indicated—the material organization and the spiritual soul. The Spirit of God made—moulded and framed—the body of clay; then the breath of the Almighty breathed into the moulded framework gave it life. The body was made, not created; the soul was created, not made. The spirit of man was a direct emanation from God. P.]

Ver. 6. [Yet though in God's stead, a body is prepared for me of clay like thine own, so that while my arguments convince, my terrors may not afflict, alluding to what Job had said, ch. 9. 34. C.]

Ver. 23. [A messenger—Christ the Angel of the covenant, Mal. 3. 1. An interpreter—Christ as a prophet, preaching the gospel to the poor and afflicted, Lu. 4. 14-32. One among a thousand—Christ as a leader and commander, Is. 55. 4. His uprightness—his duty, as was shown to the jailer at Philippi, Ac. 16. 31. C.]

[Ver. 9-11 are the statements attributed by Elihu to Job. They are substantially accurate, as may be seen by comparing them with ch. 9. 21; 16. 7; 12. 4. The tendency of Job's arguments was to indicate that as an innocent man he had been exceptionally if not unfairly treated. Elihu shows that there was a grand fundamental error in all his speeches, for God alone is pure, and all men are guilty before him. P.]

Ver. 18. [The first object of God in putting man through a course of discipline is indicated in ver. 17, 18—it is to free him from the dangerous sin of carnal security and pride. God warns him in dreams and visions. P.]

Ver. 22. [Ver. 19-22 indicate another mode in which God is pleased to instruct man. It is painful and exhausting to the body; but the final result is glorious. The same great truth is embodied by our Lord in his parable of the vine:—'And every branch in me that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.' It is also embodied in the statement, 'Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' P.]

Ver. 30. [This is a summary of God's gracious design in all the chastenings and afflictions which he sends upon his elect. It is to redeem them from sin's power. Elihu just develops the same principle which the apostle Paul enunciates; that 'all things work together for good to them that love God.' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—We ought seriously to hear out a discourse before we form a judgment on it. And they who speak for God ought to speak with great deliberation and plainness. Those who are in great trouble ought to be tenderly, as well as convincingly, dealt with. And yet a faithful testimony must be borne against the dishonours which we see or hear done to God by even the greatest of saints. In the rage of temptation or dispute, or in the depth of trouble, they often speak things very unadvisedly; and yet their words are apt to be taken in a worse sense than they meant them. To make us conceive aright of God's providence we must carefully keep in view his infinite greatness, sovereignty, grace, and wisdom. And there is great need to keep our heart with all diligence, that even in our dreams we may enjoy profitable fellowship with and instruction from God, which may humble our pride and secure the salvation of our soul. For God, at his pleasure, makes the most fearful changes upon the bodies or minds of men. But honourable to God and profitable to men are sanctified troubles. They lead to Jesus and his word as our instructors; to Jesus and his blood as our atonement and ransom; to Jesus and his law as our way in which we must walk; in our grateful returns for his mercies. They render our sins bitter and heavy, and our deliverances admired, and instigate us to invite others to a share of his goodness. And often God brings men through great tribulation to their comforts on earth as well as to their glories in heaven. Departures from God issue in ruin unless he recover us by grace. And so manifold are his admonitions that, if we perish, our ruin lies at our own door. The wiser men are, they are the more humble and willing to learn; and the more desirous to be undeceived if they have been mistaken.

CHAPTER XXXIV. Ver. 2. I appeal to you, O men of sense, and I beseech you seriously to consider what I say. 3. For the mind can judge of the truth or falsehood of doctrines, as well as the mouth can judge of the taste of food. 4. Let us, without any passion or prejudice, thoroughly examine this cause: 5, 6. For Job has uttered some very dangerous expressions in his own justification, as if he could not vindicate himself without accusing God of unjust severity towards him, 7, 8. Did ever a good man deride, not only his friends, but even his God, with such greediness and delight? Did ever a good man under trouble speak and act so like the wicked? 10-12. It is impossible that God can deny justice to any, or punish without cause, or forbear to reward men according to their deeds, either in this life or in that which is to come. 13-17. Without supposing him perfectly just he could never govern the world; and men are so far from being able to give him his charge or directions, that their existence and life depend wholly upon his mere good pleasure and bounty. 18, 19. If it be improper rudely to charge earthly princes with wickedness and impiety, how daring is it to accuse him who formed all mankind equally subject to his power and pleasure, and therefore regards the greatest no more than the least, and can never do anything unjust to gain their favour or to avoid their anger. 20. At his pleasure whole nations, in their midnight security, are in a terrible manner, by earthquakes or the like, hurried into eternity; and the mightiest princes or warriors are, by his immediate influence, displaced from their station or deprived of their life. 21. His omniscient eye discerns enough in men for which he may justly punish them. 25. He takes a full and exact account of their works; and because they are wicked he rolls a night of destructive judgment upon them; and they are bruised, as in a mortar, under the weight of it. 26. He suddenly, and with shame, hisses away these eminent ones in the open view of unnumbered spectators. 27. Because of their manifest apostasy from and obstinate rebellion against him: 28. That he may encourage mean persons to apply to him for relief; and may graciously hear the plaintive cries of the poor and afflicted. 29. And if he give deliverance, rest, and comfort, none can make trouble. If he withhold his favourable smiles, none can procure help from him. 30. He also punishes wicked men, that their insolence may be controlled, and that their subjects may not be encouraged to imitate their impieties or be perpetually held in the fetters of tyranny and oppression. 31, 32. Instead of quarrelling with God's afflictive providences, we should kindly submit to them, and with holy resolution to avoid it, beseech him to discover to us the sinful cause of them, however secret. 33. Has not God inflicted these troubles upon thee as a part of thy due reward, because thou hast grievously murmured against him? Since thou hast chosen what I never would, declare plainly thy reason for it.

Ver. 8. [Not as if Job had ever practically or intentionally taken part with these, but that his doctrines finally coincided with theirs, and rendered him a party to all their erroneous conclusions.—Note, How easily may any one, through oversight, be found in the sight of God walking with the very men whom, in his judgment and heart, he fancies that he most abhors! C.]

Ver. 32. [Theitzsch translates, 'For one, indeed, he overturneth them in the night, so that they are destroyed.⁵

26 He striketh them as wicked men in the open sight of others;

27 Because they turned back from him,⁶ and would not consider any of his ways:

28 So that they cause the cry of the poor to come unto him, and he heareth the cry of the afflicted.⁷

29 When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? and when he hideth his face,⁸ who then can behold him? whether it be done against a nation, or against a man only:

30 That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared.

31 Surely it is meet to be said unto God, I have borne chastisement, I will not offend any more:

32 That which I see not, teach thou me: if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

33 Should it be according to thy mind?² he will recompense it, whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose; and not I:³ therefore speak what thou knowest.

34 Let men of understanding tell me, and let a wise man hearken unto me.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 Comparison is not to be made with God, because our good or evil cannot extend unto him. 9 Many cry in their afflictions, but are not heard for want of faith.

ELIHU spake moreover, and said, 2 Thinkest thou this to be right, that thou saidst, My righteousness is more than God's?

3 For thou saidst, What advantage will it be unto thee? and, What profit shall I have if I be cleansed from my sin?²

4 I will answer thee,³ and thy companions with thee.

5 Look unto the heavens, and see; and behold the clouds which are higher than thou.

6 If thou sinnest, what doest thou against him? or if thy transgressions be multiplied, what doest thou unto him?

7 If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?

8 Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art, and thy righteousness may profit the son of man.

9 By reason of the multitude of oppressions they make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty.⁶

10 But none saith, Where is God my maker, who giveth songs in the night;

11 Who teacheth us more than the beasts of saith to God, I have been proud, I will not do evil; what I see not, show thou me; if I have done wrong, I will do it no more. This is given by Elihu as a model confession. It is not directly urged upon Job; but indirectly it is recommended to his consideration. Job was proud of his own integrity. To humble him, and bring him a suppliant to the throne of grace, was the object of all Job's afflictions. P.]

Ver. 33. [Speak what thou knowest. What thou truly knowest upon divine evidence, and not what is the product of thine own dissatisfied feelings. C.]

Ver. 36. [O would that Job were proved to the extreme on account of his answers after the manner of evil men (Delitzsch). The Hebrew word translated in the text 'my desire,' and in the margin 'my father,' appears to be from an Arabic root, and is equivalent to our expression 'O that.' It expresses an earnest wish or petition. The wish here is that Job's trials may continue until the whole controversy regarding his boasted uprightness be decided. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Mutual assistance is necessary in searching out truth or convincing the mistaken. But often good men, in the heat of their spirit, speak worse than they mean; and reproach both themselves and their God, in speaking or acting like the profane world. Just views of God's perfections are requisite to prevent our sinful freedoms with him, or to render us penitent for them. The eye of God constantly observes our hearts and ways. How foolish is it then to hide our sin! Rejection of his warnings, and obstinate disregard of his will, fill up men's iniquity. And they who will not be guided by his word shall be smitten with his rod of judgment: and quickly will he resent the groans of the poor and oppressed, and redress their grievances. What God gives to nations or persons none but himself can take from them. If a soul enjoy a sense of his favour through faith in Jesus, no accusations of sin, nor fears of death or hell, can any longer disturb him. And when God is our enemy the whole world cannot protect us. Let wicked men crouch as they will, and profess as they will, in order to obtain power, he can easily disappoint them in mercy to mankind. The more persons are humbled for sin the less they will complain of their sufferings; but, conscious of the depth of iniquity in their heart, and the spread of it in their life, will search out the cause, and turn from it to God. Humble confessions of our ignorance and crimes, earnest supplications for necessary instructions and supplies of grace, and holy resolutions to walk in his way, are necessary in all our dealings with God. To struggle with him who best knows how to manage us, and does all things well, is at once extremely foolish and criminal. But, alas! how often the best of men, when left to their own passions under heavy troubles, practically take part with God's enemies, insult his friends, and obstinately murmur against himself! And it is then a distinguished kindness faithfully to reprove them, and to help them to see and be affected with their offence.

CHAPTER XXXV. Ver. 9-13. Many, under terrible troubles and inhuman oppressions, cry to God for relief, and for vengeance on their oppressors: but as their prayers are mingled with no faith in God or kind sense of his goodness, but merely forced from them by the pressure of their distress and the haughty violence of their oppressors, God pays no regard to them. 14, 15. Therefore, although thou complainest that he hath not, and despairest that he will ever appear for thy relief, yet he still attends to wisdom and equity in every dispensation; therefore do thou patiently wait and earnestly look for him; and remember that it is because there is nothing of this in thy carriage that God has thus severely afflicted thee: and because of thy excessive pride he quite disregards thy former prosperity, and overlooks thy present extremity of trouble. 16. And it is owing to thy ignorance or thoughtlessness of this that so many foolish and wicked words have proceeded out of thy mouth.

Ver. 10. [To glory in afflictions, and to render thanks for disappointments and persecutions, are undoubtedly beyond the power of 'flesh and blood,' but are the constant evidences and products of divine grace. See Ps. 42. 8; 77. 6; Ac. 5. 41; Ro. 5. 3; Ep. 5. 20. C.]

Ver. 16. [The sense is, And now, because his (God's) wrath hath not visited (the wicked), but sometimes leaves them unpunished in this world, and because he (God) does not clearly take cognizance of guilt, . . . therefore Job will open his mouth in vanity, and will multiply words, without knowledge (Wordsworth). P.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is great need to be well rooted in the knowledge and faith of God's infinite greatness and goodness, in order to prevent many fatal mistakes in principle or practice. We can never make him our debtor. The best we do is unworthy of his notice; and the worst he dispenses to us is less than our iniquities deserve. Whatever trouble now attends his service, it will appear infinitely profitable at last. But many groan under their troubles who never show any humiliation for sin or desire after God. Yet irreligious poverty and suffering is, of all human miseries on earth, one of the most deplorable. It cannot be expected that such men's selfish prayers, without any regard to God or the good of their soul, should issue in help from him. While they are insensible of the most distinguishing mercies they enjoy, they cannot reasonably expect deliverance from the evils they feel, or the experience of those divine joys which overbalance every sorrow and pain. While our unhumiliated hearts only murmur and groan under our troubles, it is a mercy to be denied the removal of them. But when God corrects his saints severely for their humiliation, Satan is ever ready to drive them to despair. The greatness of their sufferings makes them to overlook their unbelief, impatience, and rashness; by which means they lose the comforts and defer the removal of them. It is only strong faith in God that can guide us aright through temptations and trouble. Despair of relief is as high a reflection upon his power and grace as impatience is on his goodness and wisdom. And if our troubles are not removed but increased, it becomes us to look well if we have not provoked God by our insolent behaviour under them.

CHAPTER XXXVI. Ver. 2. Patiently permit me to inform thee a little further, for I have yet something more to speak on God's behalf. 3. While I treat of distant matters, and fetch my arguments from the inspiration of God's Spirit, or from his wonderful works, I will maintain the justice of God in all his proceedings, and give him the glory thereof. 4. And assure thyself I will not attempt to baffle thee with sophistical arguments; but as I have thoroughly studied the point, I will make use of no reasoning but what is sincere and solid. 5. Behold, such is the infinite LIBRARY OF CÆSAR AUGUSTUS. [JOB xxxv: 16.]—"He multiplieth words without knowledge." The above picture is of a scene on the Palatine hill, known as the Library of Cæsar Augustus. Reference is made in this sixteenth verse of the thirty-fifth chapter of Job to multiplying words without knowledge. It would be very interesting to go back through the centuries and look at the volumes in the library of Cæsar Augustus. We would find, however, by comparing his library with one of the modern period, that the difference between ancient books and modern books consists in the fact that ancient books, especially outside of the range of history, were made up of words without knowledge, while it is characteristic of the books of modern times, that the words they contain must be based upon accurate knowledge of the facts which they describe.

20 ver. 15. ch. 33. 16.
Ac. 15. 14. Ho. 2. 6. 7. 14.

11 If they obey and serve him, they shall spend their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures:

12 But if they obey not, they shall perish by the sword,⁹ and they shall die without knowledge.

13 But the hypocrites in heart ¹⁴heap up wrath; they cry not when he bindeth them.¹

14 They die² in youth, and their life is among the ³unclean.

15 He ⁴delivereth the poor³ in his affliction, and ⁵openeth their ears in oppression.⁴

16 Even⁵ so would he have removed thee out of the strait into a broad place, where there is no straitness; and ⁶that which should be set on thy table should be full of fatness.

17 But thou hast ⁷fulfilled the judgment of the wicked:⁵ judgment and justice take hold on thee.⁶

18 Because⁸ there is wrath,⁷ beware lest he take thee away with his stroke: then a ⁹great ransom cannot deliver thee.⁸

19 Will he ¹⁰esteem thy riches? no, not gold, nor all the forces of strength.

20 Desire¹¹ not the night,⁹ when people are cut off in their place.

21 Take¹² heed, regard not iniquity: for ¹³this hast thou chosen rather than affliction.

22 Behold, God ¹⁴exalteth by his power; ¹⁵who teacheth like him?¹

23 Who¹⁶ hath enjoined him his way? or ¹⁷who can say, Thou hast wrought iniquity?

24 Remember that thou ¹⁸magnify his work, which men behold.

25 Every¹⁹ man may see it; man may behold it afar off.

26 Behold, ²⁰God is great, and we know him not; neither ²¹can the number of his years be searched out.

power and wisdom of God that he never despises any, however mean! 6. He will bestow no solid happiness upon wicked men, but will do justice to the humble, poor, and afflicted. 7. He never ceases his special care of the righteous; but sometimes advances them, however poor, to the highest stations; and continues, establishes, and exalts them therein. 8-10. Or if they be brought into and fixed in sore troubles, he by that means makes them to consider their ways, discern their sinfulness, and turn from it to himself. 11. If their afflictions effect their reformation to piety and virtue, great and manifold shall be the blessings and comforts bestowed upon them here and hereafter. 12. But if, notwithstanding their troubles, they continue obstinate in wickedness, they shall be cut off by some fearful calamity, and shall perish in their ignorance, folly, and sin. 13. 14. Thus hypocrites heap up treasures of wrath for themselves; they neglect to implore God's help and deliverance in their troubles; therefore their life is early cut off, in a fearful storm of his wrath, by some exemplary judgment in death; and through eternity he reckons them with, and punishes them as, the cursed and abominable. 15. But he delivers the poor and humble in their affliction, and teaches them to know and practise their duty under it. 16. And hadst thou behaved thyself aright under thy pressures, he would even now have delivered thee from thy pressing and tormenting troubles into a state of freedom and affluence, in which there should be nothing to straiten thee; and that which fell from heaven upon thy table should be full of fatness. 17. But thou hast earnestly pleaded the cause of the wicked, and justified their reproachful murmurings against the providence of God: therefore his just indignation has already seized thee, and holds thee fast in bonds of fearful affliction. 18, 19. Since he is manifesting his hot displeasure against thee, take heed lest he cut thee off without remedy; and then no ransom, however great, can redeem thy life again; nor will all the united power and virtue in the world be able to deliver thee, if God resolve to destroy thee. 20. Never wish for a period of awful judgments, in which multitudes of men are often destroyed amidst all their comforts and enjoyments. 21. Never give way to sinning, particularly to rash and intemperate speeches concerning God's providential procedure. Thus shalt thou be chosen in, and plucked out of, the furnace of affliction. But, alas! hitherto thou hast preferred rash censuring of God's ways to a patient bearing of thy afflictions. 22. It is God alone who can effectually deliver and exalt men; and none can cast down, scourge, instruct, or govern like him. Pretend not therefore to direct him. 23. None hath directed him how to govern the world, or can call him to account for his management. None can charge him with anything unjust or imprudent. Never therefore rashly complain of him. 24. Instead of censuring, always admire and speak honourably of his works of creation and providence, which men cheerfully behold, and should cordially celebrate. 25. There are scarcely any so ignorant but they must observe these, and acknowledge his greatness and excellency in them. 26. Behold, such is the unbounded perfection of God, that we can never comprehend it; and such his eternal duration that we cannot search it out. How unfit are we then to judge of and censure his conduct? 27, 28. It is he who exhales from the sea, and forms the drops of rain which fall from the clouds. 29. How incomprehensible are his spreadings of the thick clouds all along the face of the heavens, and the crashing thunder of his cloudy residence! 30. How marvellously he extends the flashing lightning all over the sky, makes it penetrate to the bottom of, or vaults it with the rainy waters exhaled from the sea! 31. By such rains, thunder, and lightning, he punishes wicked men for their sins; and by rendering the earth fruitful, makes liberal and magnificent provision for his creatures. 32. By his hollow clouds he conceals the thundering flash as well as the bright and scorching sun, and restrains it by their interposing influence. 33. Its crashing noise informs concerning it: as a red flaming treasure of wrath it hangs over the proud; or the noise of the clouds, as well as the motion of animals, portends the approach of the rain formed of vapours exhaled from the sea by the sun.

Ver. 7. [Good translates the first part thus:—'He withdraweth not his eyes from the judge, nor even from kings on the throne.' The authorized version, however, seems more consonant with Ps. 34. 15, and those promises of exaltation which are not given to kings, as such, but to the righteous of whatever rank, Ps. 89. 16; Ja. 1. 9; 1 Pe. 5. 6, and also perfectly accordant with fact, for even when the righteous are not on the throne in person, they are there by influence. See Mar. 6. 20. C.]

CHAPTER XXXVII.

27 For he maketh small the drops of water: they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof.

28 Which the clouds do drop and distil upon man abundantly.

29 Also can any understand the 'spreadings of the clouds, or the 'noise of his tabernacle?

30 Behold, he spreadeth his 'light upon it, and 'covereth the bottom of the sea.

31 For by them judgeth he the people; he giveth meat in abundance.

32 With 'clouds he covereth the light; and commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh betwixt.

33 The 'noise thereof sheweth concerning it, the cattle also concerning the 'vapour.

1 God is to be feared because of his great works. 15 His wisdom is unsearchable in them.

AT this also my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

2 Hear attentively¹ the 'noise of his voice, and the sound that goeth out of his mouth.

3 He 'directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning² unto the ends of the earth.

4 After it a 'voice roareth: he thundereth with the voice of his excellency; and he will not stay them when his voice is heard.

5 God 'thundereth marvellously with his voice; 'great things doeth he, which we cannot comprehend.

6 For 'he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth; likewise to the small rain, and to the great rain of his strength.

ning the noise roars. He thunders with the voice of his majesty: nor will he restrain the storm and rain when the roaring of his thunder is heard. 5. By thundering the mighty God produces many marvellous effects: he does many things in nature which we cannot comprehend. 6. At his command the snow falls, as also the gentle showers and the deluging rains, the impetuous showers and tempestuous storms. By the winter storm he restrains men from labour, and keeps them within doors, that they may have opportunity to consider his works. 8. The very wild beasts are obliged to shut up themselves in their thickets and dens. 9. The whirlwind is generated in the moist clouds of the south as in a chamber; and cold proceeds from the scattering north wind. 10. By God's will and appointment the frost is produced, and the rivers are congealed that they cannot flow. 11. As by pouring down continual showers he wearieth the thick cloud, so his clear brightness dispels it; and by his light he disperses the transparent dusks of the sky. 12. While the clouds are carried hither and thither at his pleasure, he himself, on every side, holds the reins of their motions, that he may accomplish his own purposes by them all over the world; 13. Whether it be for punishing the guilty by pestilential vapours and storms, or for rendering the earth fruitful, or for graciously rewarding his people with remarkable plenty. 14. Stop therefore thy censures of, and murmurings at, the dispensations of God's providence; seriously consider his wondrous works; and think how little thou understandest of the most obvious of them. 15. Knowest thou how God lays his orders or impresses his powerful influence upon them? or how he makes the rainbow-light of the transparent cloud to shine? 16. Canst thou tell how, in his marvellous wisdom, he hangs the clouds in the air, as if balanced by one another? 17. Dost thou know how thy garments wax warm when the earth is calmed by the southern sun and the pleasant gale? 18. Hast thou assisted him in clearing the sky after rain; and in making it to stand fast by its own strength, as a mirror, in which we may behold his admirable wisdom, power, goodness, and glory? 19. Teach us, if thou canst, how to speak to or of God: for by reason of his incomprehensible excellencies, and our great ignorance, we cannot speak of him to any purpose. 20. Nothing which I have said is worthy of his notice or answerable to the subject. If any attempt to describe his excellencies he will be quite confounded by their dazzling glory. 21. And just now men cannot look upon the bright shining of the sun in the sky when the wind has dispelled every cloud. 22. The godlike glancing sun shines clearly by the purifying north winds: and upon God is a robe of terrible majesty. 23. We cannot comprehend his essence, perfections, purposes, or works. His power indeed is infinite: but he will not afflict his people in strict judgment or severity of justice. 24. Men should therefore stand in awe of him and beware of quarrelling with his conduct; for he regards none who are wise in their own conceit, or who dare to contend with their Maker, or presume to censure his proceedings.

Ver. 2. [Man may speak by the mouth, by the trumpet, or other such instrument, and, in either case, the utterance is called his voice, because his will is the moving cause, and the sound is the interpreter of his spirit. So whatever organ the will of God may select is called his voice and mouth, because it speaks to the ear of reason, and interprets the secrets of his Spirit. C.]

Ver. 6. [Great rain. The rains of the tropical and bordering climates, such as that of Edom, are often such torrents, that they are justly characterized as the 'great rain of his strength.' C.]

Ver. 7. [The meaning of this verse is:—He sendeth cold so intense that man cannot perform his ordinary work in the field; and this he does that all men may be taught to see and acknowledge him and his work in everything. P.]

Ver. 9. [Out of the inmost recesses of the south—out of the depths of the great Arabian desert, come the burning sirocco, and the sweeping and destructive whirlwind which often prove fatal to travellers. P.]

Ver. 11. [Also by watering he wearieth the thick cloud—or, 'He loadeth the dense clouds with water,' maketh them carry it through the air, and scatter it wherever he willeth. P.]

Ver. 15. [It is to the clouds, or vapours, more or less densely commingling with the atmosphere, and not to direct light itself, that we are indebted for the chief beauties of the earth and sky. See Somerville's Physical Sciences, Herschel's Astron., Tomlinson's Nat. Phil. C.]

Ver. 16. [Balancing. So that they ascend and descend in the exact proportion required. C.]

Ver. 17. [Delitzsch translates:—'Those whose garments become hot when the land is sultry from the south (that is, by the influence of the south wind); dost thou with him spread out the sky?' P.]

Ver. 21. [Even now we cannot look at the light when it is resplendent in the heavens, and a wind from the north hath swept along and cleared them. M. Good.]

Ver. 23. ['The Almighty—we cannot discover him; the excellent in power, judgment, and justice, he perverteth not.' This is one of the most sublime passages in the Bible. With equal clearness and beauty the speaker sets forth the majesty, the power, and the perfection of God in government. P.]

Ver. 24. ['In this last speech Elihu's chief aim is to defend God against Job's charge of injustice. He shows how omnipotence, love, and justice are all found in God. When judging of God's omnipotence, we are to beware of censuring him who is absolutely exalted above us and our comprehension; when judging of God's love, we are to beware of interpreting his afflictive dispensations, which are designed for our well-being, as the persecution of an enemy; when judging of his justice, we are to beware of maintaining our own righteousness at the cost of the divine, and of thus avoiding the penitent humbling of one's self under his well-meant chastisement' (Delitzsch). P.]

REFLECTIONS.—O how much of God is to be seen in the works of nature, in the forms of clouds, and in the changes and forms of weather! If all creatures thus fulfil his pleasure, why should men be rebels and refuse his direction and government! Why do we not improve his corrections and mercies! It is absurd for

Ver. 18. ['Because of anger rebel not against his stroke; let not the greatness of the ransom (which you may be able to offer) tempt thee to sin.' P.]

Ver. 27. [Because rain is so common, men seldom calculate the power exhibited in its production and distribution. Yet, lo! without hand, it waters and fructifies the whole earth, while all the men of the world could not so irrigate a single kingdom. C.]

Ver. 31. [Judgeth he the people. The old world with the deluge; Sodom and Gomorrah with lightning, thunder, &c. Yet by them he also fructifies the earth and provides food for every living thing. So various are the purposes for which his wisdom employs the same natural agency. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Plain and important speeches for God deserve the most fixed attention. Faithful souls are always zealous to vindicate God's dispensations from men's foolish and sinful aspersions; and truth and simplicity of speech always become such as profess themselves teachers of God's good ways. It is proper that we should always retain exalted thoughts of God: that he thinks none below his notice, however mean; countenances none of the wicked, however great; is always ready to redress the injured; takes a peculiar pleasure to protect those that are good; and brings special ruin on hypocrites, as the treacherous enemies of his government. If God exalt me to honour, let me exert myself for the welfare of mankind, and prepare for giving my account to him. If he afflict me, let me thankfully believe it done to discover my past sins, and to dispose me to receive his sanctifying instructions; fully persuaded that deliverance and comfort shall appear whenever his merciful end is gained. If my deliverance be delayed, my continued sin is the cause. But if I am not bettered by his rod, let me fear, lest my stupidity and dissimulation should issue in the suffering of his everlasting judgment. In affliction let me never be secure or make light of his stroke. Let me never hope to find out ways of my own to withstand or avoid it. Let me never dare to persevere in self-vindication or quarrelling with God;—never dare to prescribe to him who is an absolute ruler, an incomparable teacher, and unexceptionably just in all his procedure; and with whom neither riches can bribe nor darkness conceal. In the glory of his works let me discern the perfections of his nature. If he makes the clouds fountains to the lower world and vails to the upper, let me view everything formed in them—rain, hail, snow, or thunder—as his workmanship. And while I am here, let me live by faith, not by sight. Whom, having not seen, let me love; and in whom, though now I see him not, let me rejoice with joy un-speakable and full of glory.

CHAPTER XXXVII. Just now my heart trembles, and is like to start out of its place, at the thought or hearing of the terrible thunder. 2. Hear attentively the roaring noise of JEHOVAH's voice, and the breathing murmur that proceeds from his lips. 3. By his providence he guides the forcible and straight darting of the thunderbolts along the whole extent of the sky, and makes the blaze of lightning to fly over the confines of the earth. 4. After the blazing flash of light-

7 He 'sealeth up the hand' of every man; that all men may 'know his work.

8 Then the beasts 'go into dens, and remain in their places.⁸

9 Out of the south⁹ cometh the 'whirlwind, and cold out of the 'north.

10 By 'the breath¹ of God frost is given; and the breadth of the waters is straitened.

11 Also by 'watering he wearieth the thick cloud: he 'scattereth his bright² cloud.³

12 And it is 'turned round about by his counsels;⁴ that they may do 'whatsoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth.

13 He 'causeth it to come, whether for correction,⁵ or for his land, 'or for mercy.⁶

14 Hearken unto this, O Job; 'stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God.

15 Dost⁷ thou know when God disposed them, and caused the light of his cloud to shine?

16 Dost thou know the 'balancings of the clouds, the wondrous works of him which is perfect⁸ in knowledge?

17 How 'thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south wind?

18 Hast thou with him 'spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking-glass?

19 Teach⁹ us what we shall say unto him; for we^b cannot order our speech by reason of darkness.

20 Shall it be told him that I speak? If a man speak, surely 'he shall be swallowed up.⁷

21 And now men 'see not the bright light which is in the clouds: but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them.

22 Fair⁸ weather cometh 'out of the north: with God 'is terrible majesty.⁹

23 Touching the Almighty, 'we cannot find him out: he is 'excellent in power, and in 'judgment, and in 'plenty of justice: he 'will not afflict.¹

24 Men do 'therefore fear him:² he 'respecteth not any that are wise of heart.

Of this constellation Freytag, the northernmost, was in the colour of the vernal equinox 2129 years before Christ, which would date the time of Job much earlier than has been indicated in former notes. Dr. Haies, by a singular calculation, drawn from Akiba-ban, fixes it 2337 years before the Christian era. The error of these calculations lies in assuming the period when this constellation became the leader of the spring, whereas the Pleiades, in the same latitude, might serve for centuries to be the most remarkable constellation of the spring. See this point still further established in Landseer's Sabean Researches, p. 115—C.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

God proceedeth to show his own power, and man's weakness and ignorance, by instances from the animal creation: 1 of the wild goats and hinds, 5 of the wild ass, 9 the unicorn, &c.

KNOWEST thou the time when the wild goats¹ of the rock bring forth? or canst thou mark when the hinds do calve?

bottom of the ocean, or walked, as in state, through the inmost corners of the deep, to know and direct everything there? 17. Art thou fully acquainted with all the dark caverns and inmost parts of the earth: or with the whole nature and circumstances of death and the grave, and of the eternal state? 18. Are the dimensions of the earth, with its whole substance and product, perfectly known to thee? 19-21. Dost thou, by thy great experience and long observation, fully understand the orderly returns of light and darkness, day and night? or canst thou direct their motions in a proper manner? 22, 23. Art thou fully acquainted with the collections of snow and hail in the clouds? and canst thou, like me, regularly bring them forth in the winter season or in the seasons of wrathful calamities? 24. How is the light of the sun, moon, or stars so equally and so widely diffused? How is the way prepared for the overflowing rains, or for the lightning and thunder? and how are their motions so regularly directed? 26, 27. Is it by thy direction that the rain waters those places of the earth where no one lives to do it, or which, without seasonable rains, could produce nothing? 28-30. Canst thou form drops of rain or dew; or produce ice or hoar-frost; or tell how they are formed; and how the surface of the waters is congealed into a kind of stone? 31. Canst thou alter the seasons of the year by restraining the influences of the heat and summer-boding stars? or free the earth from the tempestuous influence of the winter and sloth-boding stars? 32. Canst thou make to appear, and lead round, the luminaries of the middle region of heaven in their season? Canst thou direct the round whirling pole-stars and their attendants? 33. Knowest thou all the order and laws of the heavenly bodies? Couldst thou settle the whole government of them, and their influence upon the earth? 34, 35. Canst thou, just now, by a call bring down an abundant rain on the place where thou art, or make the thunder to dart forth its flames over thine head; or do whatever thou pleasest? 36. Canst thou direct the random darting of thunder and lightning to strike as regularly as if it had solid wisdom and distinct perception? or didst thou give thyself rational understanding? Canst thou tell how a single thought is formed? 37, 38. Canst thou number and govern all the clouds of heaven; or restrain the rain when the earth is sufficiently watered? 39-41. Canst thou provide food even for the most ravenous creatures, particularly for the lioness and her whelps, or for old lions incapable of leaving their dens; or for the young ravens when by their dams they are expelled from the nest?

Ver. 1. [No notice is taken of the transition from Elihu, God visible in human form, to JEHOVAH invisible in the whirlwind or stormy cloud. To those who feel any difficulty in identifying Elihu (God himself, see Mat. 1: 23) with JEHOVAH, it may be useful to examine the appearance of JEHOVAH to Abraham, and his familiar converse with him, Ge. 18: 13-33; and afterwards his appearance to Moses, Ex. 3: 2; 19: 9, 16, 18, 21; 20: 18, 22; and recollect that in each case this was the same JEHOVAH variously manifested; and when these facts are compared, the various appearances in Job will be more easily understood as alike manifesting 'the Word that was with God, and was God.' C.]

Ver. 2. [This ought rather to be rendered—'Who then darkeneth counsel,' &c. The words are addressed not to Elihu, who had just concluded speaking, but to Job, who said (ch. 31: 35), 'O that the Almighty would answer me!' And Job applies them to himself in ch. 42: 3. P.]

Ver. 7. [This is a suggestive as well as a beautiful passage. In the lofty imagery peculiar to the East there is embodied the truth that 'the sons of God,' or angelic hosts, existed before the formation of the world in its present state, and rejoiced at the construction of the splendid home of the future human family. It farther seems to indicate that the stars had been created previous to the preparation of this earth for man. P.]

Ver. 10. [Bars and doors. How wonderful that the iron-bound rock and the loose disconnected sand should alike barrier out the encroachments of the ocean! The chief bars and doors, however, are the balancing of the relative attractions of the sun and moon, on the one hand, and of the earth on the other. Were the attractions of the sun and moon greater, and of the earth less, the earth would be swept over by a continuous ocean tide. C.]

Ver. 13. [The figure is taken from the shaking of a great floor-cloth or carpet. The morning light taking hold, as it were, of the whole covering of the earth's surface, shakes off from it all evil-doers. They flee from the light lest their deeds should be seen. P.]

Ver. 14. [The meaning seems to be, that it (the earth) when turned round to the full light of the sun, is like the clay on which the definite impress of the signet-ring is stamped. When all was dark the lineaments upon its surface were invisible, but the light revealed them, and made them stand out in bold relief. P.]

Ver. 15. [Darkness is the light of the wicked. They love it, and work in it. The morning sun dispels the darkness, and the power ('the high arm') of the wicked is then broken. P.]

Ver. 24. [East wind. The east wind of Scripture geography is uniformly that of destruction. See Ge. 41: 6; Job 27: 21; Ps. 48: 7; Je. 18: 17; Eze. 17: 10; 18: 12; Jn. 4: 8. C.]

Ver. 25. [The water-course refers not to river-beds, but to the aerial channel by which the rain descends, when produced by the lightning in the sky; as by passing the electric spark through oxygen and hydrogen gases water is formed. C.]

Ver. 31. [Orion. Kesil in Arabic signifies cold, inactivity, torpor, and seems justly applied by Aben Ezra to the star Antares in the heart of the constellation Scorpio; and it is opposed to Pleiades by nearly half the heavens, and would consequently denote the benumbing influences of winter. C.]

Ver. 32. [Mazzaroth. The twelve monthly signs of the zodiac.—Arcturus. Most probably the Great Bear, the apparent nightly changes of which always render it a most remarkable object to observers. C.]

Ver. 36. [The Hebrew word here rendered 'heart' has been variously interpreted. It is derived from a root which signifies to 'look at' or 'contemplate'; and hence it is natural to understand it as meaning the intellect. This is the meaning given to it by the best Jewish authorities. In the Vulgate version it is translated cock, as the bird which announces the coming of the morning. P.]

The animal commonly called unicorn has no existence except in heraldry, though Barrow (see his Travels in Africa, p. 204) describes such a creature, but does not affirm having seen it. A few consider the reem to be of the deer species, but the common opinion turns to the rhinoceros, which well accords with the description, and is also a literal unicorn. See Campbell's Travels in S. Africa, vol. ii. p. 204. Robinson (see Biblical Researches, vol. iii. p. 306) thinks it is the buffalo, but this animal does not seem to correspond with the powerful creature described in the text. While the mighty elephant is perfectly tamed, the rhinoceros is considered utterly irrecusable. See ver. 12.—C.

difficult is it to converse with God than is generally thought by those who appeal to him! Infinite is his wisdom who knows all things! and great his power who can do, and has made, and manages all things. All things around us are full of God: all monitors to teach us concerning him, and to stir us up to worship and glorify him! But the boasted knowledge of mankind is vain and scanty, which can everywhere be non-plussed in the most common things of nature. Let me then never contend with God;—never pretend to be a judge of his nature, purposes, or works:—but be always content with things as they are; and to be led by him, as one blind, in the ways which I know not. If he has made all things in nature so well, my new-covenant portion and lot is certainly exactly wise and kind. And if he take such care of the works of his hands, the most ravenous not excepted, it is impossible that he should forget, forsake, starve, or mismanage any of those who believe.

CHAPTER XXXIX. Ver. 1-4. Is it by thy wisdom, power, care, and providence, that the wild goats and hinds are assisted in their painful births, or their young ones so well nourished? 5-8. Or that while the tame ass is so dull and stupid, the wild ass is so nimble, untractable, regardless of mankind, and lodged and maintained in the desert mountains? 9-12. Art thou capable, by all thy power and skill, to tame a wild bull, and train him to the labours of the field performed by the ox? 13-18. Dost thou adorn with wings and feathers the ostrich, that is so careless of her eggs and young, that the sun must hatch the former, and Providence alone takes care of the latter, and so fleet in running with extended wings? 19-25. Hast thou given strength and bravery to the horse? Dost thou produce the triumphant shaking of his mane, or the neighing and snorting of his throat, when he is bent upon the battle? Canst thou make him to bounce like a grasshopper? The disdainful and courageous snortings of his nostrils are terrible. When armies meet for battle he paweth in the valley, fiercely priding himself in his strength: he springs forth to meet the armour of war, rushing into the battle without any fear of danger. Quite unaffrighted he laughs at the terror of the battle: he turns not back from the sword. Over him regardless rattle and hiss the arrows of the quiver, the flaming spear, and ruinous lance. With fierceness and rage he gallops over and tears up the ground. For joy he reckons the sound of the trumpet but an encouraging blast: and at the full blowing of the trumpet he dances and sports for joy. He smells the battle afar off, the thunder-like roaring of the princes, and the alarm of war. 26. Is it by thy direction that hawks fly away so strongly, steadily, swiftly, unweariably, and cunningly, to catch their prey; and that they bask in the sun, or remove to warmer climates in the winter? 27-30. Is it by thy direction that eagles fly directly upward, or choose their rocky residence, or spy out and rush upon their prey?

Ver. 9. [The term 'unicorn,' or 'one-horned,' is a misnomer. The Hebrew word is reem, and it is evident from De. 33. 17, where 'the horns of an unicorn' are mentioned, that the animal referred to had two horns. P.]

Ver. 13. [Rather—'The wings of the ostrich vibrate, but are they as the pinions of the stork and the falcon? The wings of the ostrich never lift her from the earth, yet God compensates this defect by swiftness, so that she is as safe as the soaring falcon. God has deprived her of parental instincts, yet her young are protected by Providence as well as the young of the stork, the example and the emblem of maternal tenderness. C.—This is a very obscure passage. The true meaning of the verse seems to be, 'The wing of the ostrich (resnanim, 'the female ostrich'; so called on account of her peculiar cry) vibrates joyously; but is wing and feather affectionate? i.e. as explained in the context, does she exhibit ordinary parental instinct or affection, when abandoning her eggs in the desert? P.]

Ver. 17. [It is a singular fact that among the Bedawin 'more foolish than an ostrich' is a common proverb; and it is evidently as old as the time of Job. 'Fleeter than an ostrich' is another proverb almost as common as the former. P.]

Ver. 24. [Rather—'And he standeth not still when the trumpet soundeth; i.e. so soon as his ear catches the sound of the war-trumpet he will scarcely bear restraint, he rushes to the battle. A remark of Layard, the truth of which I can myself verify, beautifully illustrates this passage:—'Although docile as a lamb, and requiring no other guide than the halter, when the Arab mare hears the war-cry of the tribe, and sees the quivering spear of her rider, her eyes glitter with fire, her blood-red nostrils open wide, her neck is nobly arched, and her tail and mane are raised and nobly out to the wind.' P.]

Ver. 29. [Her eyes behold afar off. The extraordinary far-sightedness of the eagle is well known. It can descry its prey on the ground when, to the human eye, it is perfectly invisible in the clouds; those species that live upon the dead fully realize our Lord's description, Mat. 24. 28, and an animal is scarcely fallen until they appear on the verge of the horizon hastening to its destruction. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how all things mark the excellencies of their Maker and depend on God! The eyes of all wait on him; and he giveth them their meat in due season. And surely it is absurd for men to boast of beauty, strength, swiftness, or other bodily endowments, when one or more of the brute animals excel them in all these. But, alas! how often are we like them in their worst qualities, like hinds in sinful cowardice; like wild asses in our unsettled temper; like unicorns or wild bulls in untamableness and rage in the net of affliction; like ostriches in stupidity and unconcern about the real welfare of children; like horses in pride and fury; like hawks and eagles in ambition, greediness, and cruelty! But if God feed these, he will never let the redeemed sheep of his pasture want. Lo, in what lofty manner he speaks of these animals! But how much sweeter to my soul are his descriptions of Jesus and his love, Jesus and his work, Jesus and his fulness!—All for men! all for me!

CHAPTER XL. Ver. 2. Has there not been enough said to chastise and convince thee of thy mistakes in contending with and censuring the providence of God? 3. Job replied to the Lord, 4. Behold, with grief and shame, I acknowledge my own meanness, folly, and filthiness. I have nothing to say against thee or for myself. 5. I have too often desired a dispute with thee; but I dare not defend my conduct. I dare not proceed further in such bold and presumptuous expressions and accusations of thy providence. 6. SOURCE OF THE JORDAN. [JOB, x1:23.]—"Behold, he drinketh up a river, and hasteneth not: he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth." Perhaps the two leading sources of the river are found in the Hasbany arm and the Banias tributary. The view we give above was taken at Banias or ancient Cæsarea Philippi. Nothing can be imagined more beautiful than the very vigorous way the Jordan breaks from under the Hermon range of mountains, creating in ancient Cæsarea Philippi a tropical vegetation. This is a very beautiful historic spot. Here is the temple with its Greek inscriptions dedicating the place to Pan and the nymphs of the fountain. Then here is abundance of game. Wild boars, foxes, jackals, gazelles, deer, hare, wolves, hyenas, bears and panthers are said to infest this region.

16 Lo now, his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel⁵ of his belly.

18 His bones are as strong pieces of brass; his bones are like bars of iron.

19 He is the chief of the "ways of God: he that made him can make his sword to "approach unto him.

20 Surely the mountains "bring him forth food, where all the beasts of the field play.

21 He lieth under the shady trees, in the covert of the reed, and fens.

22 The shady trees cover him with their shadow; the willows of the brook compass him about.

23 Behold, he drinketh¹ up a river, and hasteth not:² he trusteth that he can draw up "Jordan into his mouth.

24 He taketh it with his eyes: his nose pierceth through snares.³

CHAPTER XLI.

God's great power seen in the leviathan.

CANST thou draw out "leviathan with an hook? or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest down?¹

2 Canst thou put an "hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

3 Will he make many supplications unto thee? will he speak soft words unto thee?

4 Will he make a covenant with thee? wilt thou take him for a servant for ever?

5 Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

6 Shall thy companions make a banquet of him? shall they part him among the merchants?

7 Canst thou "fill his skin with barbed irons? or his head with fish-spears?

8 Lay⁴ thine hand upon him, remember the battle, do no more.²

his repentance not being sufficiently full, God further required him to pluck up his spirits if he could, and answer some further interrogations. 8. Wilt thou, in the manner of wicked men, arraign and attempt to overturn my sentence against thee, and my government of human affairs? Wilt thou censure me as unjust in afflicting thee that thou mayest appear innocent? 9. 10. Art thou God's equal in infinite power, majesty, and glory? 11-14. Canst thou, as God, scatter abroad the tokens of thine anger; or exhibit thy frowns for the debasement and destruction of thy most powerful and insolent enemies? If so, I will acknowledge thou canst uphold thyself, and hast some pretence to contend with me; but if not, it becomes thee humbly to submit to my most afflictive providences. 15-24. But that thou mayest be further convinced of thy inability to contend with me, behold how incapable thou art of contending with the elephant or river-horse, which I formed along with thee as thy fellow-creature, and not far from thy residence? He quietly feeds upon the herbs produced by the earth. Behold what strength is in his loins; what mighty force is in the warped sinews of his belly! His tail is large, stiff, and strong as a cedar; and with it, or his trunk, he could rend cedars. The sinews of his thighs are interwoven and wrapped together; his smaller bones are as pipes of brass, and the larger ones as bars of iron for strength. He is a principal creature on earth. The mighty God, who made him and gives him his power, can easily subdue and destroy him. The mountains afford him pasture, while the other wild beasts securely sport themselves around him. His ordinary residence is under the shadow of trees or reeds, growing in fens or on the banks of rivers. No outrageous overflowing of waters affrights him, or makes him to run off in haste. And while he dives into a river, or drinks excessively, no terror can make him leave off till his thirst be altogether quenched.

Ver. 11. [First try thy power against man, and if thou fail in humbling or conquering him, thy fellow, how wilt thou contend with God thy maker and judge? C.]

Ver. 19. [Chief of the ways of God. The greatest size of the hippopotamus is 17 feet in length and 7 in height—a description that in point of animal size and power, the only points in question, could never entitle it to the character in the text. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—To what arrogant quarrelling with God afflicted saints sometimes proceed! but it always issues in great shame and grief at last. Communion with God himself effectually convinces and humbles a saint, and makes him glad to part with his most beloved sins. But there is need of thorough convictions and humiliation to prepare us for remarkable deliverance. And it is unsafe to heal wounded consciences slightly, or to catch at comforts to be rid of convictions. Men may be humbled and yet not duly humbled. God takes pleasure in debasing the proud who attempt to rival his honours. And woe to him that contends with his Maker! But easily can that God who made, manages, feeds, lodges, and works these monstrous animals, provide for and manage me and all my concerns!

CHAPTER XLI. Ver. 1, 2. And to give thee another evidence of thy weakness even to contend with one of my creatures, canst thou, by a hook fastened in his tongue, nose, or jaw, draw the crocodile or the toothed whale out of the water! 3-5. Canst thou force him to supplicate thy favour to let him go, or make him enter into an agreement to serve thee? or canst thou make him a mean of diverting thyself and children? 6. Wilt thou and thy partners in catching him make a feast upon his flesh, or part your shares of him among the merchants? 7. Where is the dart with which thou canst penetrate his skin, or the fish-spear that can wound his head? 8. Touch him if thou darest; immediate destruction will prevent thy remembrance of the conflict or repeating thy blow. 9. The hope of taking him is quite vain. The very sight of him is enough to terrify and dispirit one. 10. No, not the fiercest dare awake him when sleeping or stir him up when resting himself. Who then is able to contend with me, who am infinitely more strong and terrible? 11. And since everything in the world is my sole property, who hath prevented me with favours that I should repay them? or who, by first attacking me, hath forced me to submit to his terms of peace? 12. But 9 Behold, the hope of him is in vain:³ shall not one be cast down even at the sight of him?

10 None is so fierce that dare stir him up: who⁶ then is able to stand before me?

11 Who⁷ hath prevented me, that I should repay⁴ him? whatsoever is under the whole heaven is mine.

12 I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.⁵

13 Who can discover the face of his garment? or who can come to him with⁶ his double bridle?

14 Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about.

15 His⁸ scales are his pride, shut up together as with a close seal.

16 One is so near to another, that no air can come between them.

17 They are joined one to another, they stick together, that they cannot be sundered.

18 By his neesings a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eyelids of the morning.

19 Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out.

20 Out of his nostrils goeth smoke, as out of a seething pot or caldron.⁷

22 In his neck remaineth strength, and sorrow is turned⁹ into joy before him.¹

23 The flakes² of his flesh are joined together: they are firm in themselves; they cannot be moved.

24 His heart is as firm as a stone; yea, as hard as a piece of the nether millstone.

25 When he raiseth up himself, the mighty are afraid: by reason of breakings they purify themselves.³

26 The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold;⁴ the spear, the dart,⁵ nor the habergeon.⁷

27 He esteemeth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood.

28 The arrow cannot make him flee: sling-stones are turned with him into stubble.

¹ It must be readily admitted, that if be-hemoth and leviathan be the river-horse and the crocodile, then no one would dream of interpreting these words literally; but if, on the other hand, be-hemoth, as elsewhere in this same book, be a generic and not a specific name; and if leviathan be for strength, courage, and natural defence, chief of the ways of God; and, by consequence, one of those extinct animals described by Cuvier and others, then might it be questionable were the description merely figurative. To the observers of nature, who have examined the wonderful night lamps afforded by various creatures, both by land and sea, to those who have further examined the terrible electrical powers possessed by others, the existence of an animal whose breath became luminous, and possessed of the electric power of literally sending 'sparks of fire' out of his mouth, will appear neither extravagant nor impossible in fact. Had some ancient traveller spoken of a fish that 'wicked the lightning, and smote to death the invader of its waters,' this, some years ago, would have been pronounced absolutely false, or at best, figurative; but the student of natural history would now instantly recognize it as a literal description of the gymnotus.

CHAPTER XLII.

¹ Job submitteth himself unto God. ⁷ God, preferring Job's cause, maketh his three friends submit themselves to him. ⁹ He accepteth and blesseth Job. ¹⁶ His age and death.

THEN Job answered the LORD, and said,
2 I know that 'thou canst do every thing, and that¹ no thought can be withholden¹ from thee.

3 Who² is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?² therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things³ too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

4 Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak: I will demand³ of thee, and declare thou unto me.

5 I have⁷ heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now⁹ mine eye seeth thee:⁴

6 Wherefore⁵ I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

7 ¶ And it was so, that, after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not⁶ spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.⁵

8 Therefore take unto you now⁷ seven bullocks and seven rams, and⁸ go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall⁹ pray for you: for¹ him will I accept: lest I deal with you² after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 ¶ So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite⁹ went, to take a particular view of the strength and well-proportioned parts of the monster which I have mentioned; 13. Who dare strip him of his scaly skin, or put a bridle in his mouth? 14. Who dare open his jaws? The surrounding rows of his teeth are terror itself. 15-17. They, as well as his scales, are closely and inseparably connected. 18. His neesings, while he lies gaping in the sun, make a light to shine, and the water which he spouts up into the air reflects the sunbeams. His sparkling eyes emit a reddish and bright shining light. 19-21. How terribly hot is the stream of breath which proceeds from his mouth or nostrils? 22. In his neck strength lodges to an amazing degree. Before his face sorrow and desolation triumphantly leap, as, without fear or pity, he destroys every animal he meets with. 23. The flakes of his flesh are, as it were, soldered into a lump of metal, which cannot be moved or easily cut asunder. 24. His heart consists of the most solid flesh; and is quite destitute of every form of compassion. 25. When he appears above water the courageous mariners are rendered almost distracted with terror, and forced to their confessions and prayers, expecting nothing but present death. 26-29. No sword, spear, dart, javelin, arrows, or slinged stones can be made to penetrate his body. 30. Without hurt or pain he makes his bed on sharp-pointed rocks, stones, or pieces of ice. 31. When he breathes and tumbles about in the water, he makes it to foam and rage as if it were a boiling pot full of ointment. 32. When he swims along, he leaves the furrows behind him all marked with froth and foam, on the surface of the sea. 33. No animal on earth is equally fearless and terrible. 34. With contempt he beholds the highest animals or loftiest ships, and brings them down with a sweep of his tail, tearing and rending them at his pleasure. He is king of all the huge and fierce-looking monsters.

Ver. 1. [Leviathan. From the description of ver. 33, we believe leviathan to be some of those extinct species of animals whose gigantic remains prove the existence of creatures 60 feet and upwards in length and 25 in height; but of whose instinctive endowments and habits we can know nothing, unless they be contained in the wonderful description of this chapter. C.—The minute description given of leviathan in this sublime passage will leave no doubt on the mind of the naturalist that the crocodile is the animal here referred to. The enormous tail, 'like a cedar,' the impenetrable skin (ver. 7); the great mouth and formidable teeth (ver. 14); his lair among the reeds by the river's brink—all point to the great crocodile. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—If I am so unacquainted with animals, how scanty must be my knowledge of their infinite Maker! If these are a terror to me, how much more ought the Almighty and his infinite majesty! If I could not tame or manage some one of these, how dare I presume to attempt wresting the government of providence out of God's hand! Surely then, above all, I must not dare to imagine him my debtor, or to interrogate him concerning his conduct. And if my God governs these monsters, I need not be afraid of either men or devils. But why should I indulge pride, when, after all my boastings, I am to have some ugly and ravenous monster my superior in it?

CHAPTER XLII. [Ver. 3. Job here refers to his own previous conduct. He had attempted by his rash statements, and his insinuations of injustice on God's part, and injured innocence on his own part, to obscure the gracious purpose the Almighty had in view and did according as the LORD commanded them: the LORD also accepted *Job.⁶

10 And the LORD *turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the LORD gave[†] Job twice as much as he had before.

11 Then^{} came there unto him all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house; and they bemoaned^{} him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him: every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold.⁷

in his afflictions. Now he fully perceives and faithfully and humbly acknowledges all. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How serious and humble fellowship with God makes a soul! And it is a great mercy that, when he demands of us answers of obedience, we may freely demand of him knowledge and grace to answer his requirements. If his gracious convictions render us exceeding vile and loathsome in our own view, let us expect that our deliverance is at hand. *esus' blood and grace can more than balance our sins. Whom God humbles and pardons he delights to honour and acknowledge as his own. Yea, tenderly he regards his afflicted saints, notwithstanding their peevish quarrellings with him. He resents in the most humiliating manner the injuries done to them by their angry friends: and he often finds them sadly mistaken who were positive of their being in the right. But it is pleasant to see saints reconciled to one another through Jesus' death, in order to their enjoyment of comfortable fellowship with God. And our consolation is certainly approaching when our repentance towards God, faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, and forgiving kindness to and prayer for injurious friends, are become remarkable. God can easily make all things concur for the welfare or enrichment of his people. And it is absurd therefore to despair in distress, when this very book was written for our encouragement in it.—But was not Job a type of our blessed Redeemer? He was infinitely rich and righteous; yet for our sakes he became poor, till he had not where to lay his head. Quickly was he reduced to the depths of abasement: and behold how he lay bearing our sins, and carrying our sorrows, in the stable—in the manger—in the garden—on the cross—and in the grave! Stupendous and amazing were the troubles, the assaults, he suffered from God—from sinners—from saints! How tempted—how reproached—how afflicted and tormented! But marvellous was his faith, resignation, and patience; and undeserved and powerful his intercession; till at last he arose into illustrious and lasting glory and honour; and a great church of Jewish and Gentile saints succeeded and proceeded from his troubles.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Book of Psalms is one of the most extensive and useful in Holy Scripture, as it is everywhere suited to the case of the saints. It is at first much mixed with complaints and supplications, and at last issues in pure and lasting praise. That Heman composed Ps. lxxxviii., Ethan the lxxxixth, and Moses the xcth is certain. But whether those under the name of Asaph were mostly penned by him, or only assigned to be sung by him as a master of the temple music, as others were to Jeduthun, or to the sons of Korah, or other chief musicians, we cannot determine. Some, as Ps. lxxiv. lxxix. cxvii. cxxxvii., appear to have been composed after the captivity to Babylon was begun; but by whom we know not. The rest, including those two marked with the name of Solomon, might be composed by David, the sweet Psalmist of Israel.

Twenty-five of the psalms have no title at all; and whether the titles of the rest are of divine authority is not altogether agreed. But when it is considered that these titles everywhere appear in the Hebrew originals, and how often they serve as a key to the psalm, and are sometimes connected with it by the accentuating points, there is no real ground to suspect their authenticity. Nor are interpreters agreed with respect to the signification of some of the Hebrew words standing in these titles. We think that MASCHIL always signifies that the psalm is designed for instruction, Ps. xxxii. xlii. xliii. xlv. lii. liii. liv. lv. lxxiv. lxxviii. lxxxviii. lxxxix. MIGHTAM denotes the precious or golden nature of the psalm; as Ps. xvi. lvi. lx. ALTASCHITH, that the scope of the psalm is to deprecate destruction, Ps. lvii. lviii. lix. MUTHLABBEN, that the psalm was composed on the occasion of the death of his son, or of Goliath the duellist, Ps. ix. AIJELETH SHAHAR, that its subject is Jesus Christ, the hind of the morning, Ps. xxii. JONATH-ELEM-REHOKIM, that David is therein represented as a mute dove among foreigners, Ps. lvi. SHOSHANNIM, SHOSHANNIM-EDUTH, or SHUSHAN-EDUTH, may either signify that Christ and his people, who are lilies, or lilies of the congregation or testimony, are the subject of it; or that it was sung on an instrument of six strings, Ps. xlv. lx. lxix. lxxx., as SHEMINITH denotes an instrument of eight strings, Ps. vi. xii. MAHALATH may either signify the disease, and MAHALATH-LEANOTH the afflicting disease; or MAHALOTH may signify a wind-instrument of music, Ps. liii. lxxxviii. NEGINATH and NEGINOTH denote stringed instruments of music, Ps. lxi. iv. vi. liv. lv. lxxvii. lxxvi. NEHILOTH, wind ones, Ps. v. GITTITH, a musical instrument, or tune invented at Gath, Ps. viii. lxxxiv. ALAMOTH, the virginals, or a song to be sung by the virgins, Ps. xlv. SHIGGAION, or SHIGIONOTH, may denote the diversified matter or tune of the psalm, Ps. vii. The cxxth and fourteen next following are called SONGS OF DEGREES; perhaps because they were sung on the different steps of the temple-stairs; or were sung at certain halts made by David and the Israelites when they brought up the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem, 2 Sa. vi.; or were sung by the Hebrews at their different rests when they came up from the country to their three solemn feasts; or were partly sung by the Jews at their different resting-places in their return from Babylon, Le. xxiii.; Eze. ii.

The Hebrews divided this book into five, ending with Ps. xli. lxxix. cvi. and cl.; the first four of which are concluded with AMEN. Interpreters have attempted to arrange or class the Psalms into a variety of different forms. To me it appears not improper to distinguish them into, I. INSTRUCTIVE; which are either (1) HISTORICAL, relating what God had done for the psalmist or for the Jewish nation, &c., as Ps. xviii. lxxviii. lxxix. civ. cv. cxi. cxiv. cxxxv. cxxxvi. (most of which are also EUCHARISTIC); or (2) DOCTRINAL, declaring and explaining the principles and duties of religion; as Ps. i. xiv. xv. xix. xxxvi. xxxvii. xlix. l. liii. lxiv. lxxvi. lxxvii. lxxviii. lxxx. lxxxii. xc. ci. cxii. cxix. cxxvii. cxxx. cxxxiii. cxxxix.—II. PROPHEPIC; foretelling events relative to Christ or his church; as Ps. ii. viii. xvi. xxi. xxii. xxiv. xxix. xl. xlv. xlvii. xlviii. lxxvii. lxxviii. lxxix. xciii. xev. xcvi. xcvi. xcvi. xcvi. c. cx. cxvii. cxxxii. cxlix.; not a few of which are also EUCHARISTIC. III. CONSOLATORY; in which the psalmist comforts himself and others in the promises, perfections, or works of God; as Ps. iv. xi. xlii. xxvii.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

xxxii. xxxvii. xlv. lviii. lxxiii. xci. cxxi. cxxv. cxxviii. cxxix. IV. PETITIONARY; in which he bewails his own or the church's condition, and supplicates deliverance; as Ps. iii. v. vi. vii. x. xii. xiii. xvii. xx. xxv. xxvi. xxvii. xxviii. xxxv. xxxviii. xli. xlii. xliii. xlv. li. liv. lv. lvii. lix. lx. lxi. lxxiii. lxxiv. lxx. lxxi. lxxiv. lxxix. lxxx. lxxxiii. lxxxv. lxxxvi. lxxxviii. cii. cxix. cxx. cxxiii. cxxx. cxxxii. cxxxvii. cxli. cxlii. cxliii. cxviii. Seven of these, in which the psalmist makes confession of his sin, viz. Ps. vi. xxii. xxxviii. li. cii. cxxx. cxliii., are called PENITENTIAL. V. EUCHARISTIC; in which he stirs up himself and others to praise and thank the Lord for his favours; as Ps. ix. xviii. xxx. xxxiii. xxxiv. lx. lxxv. lxxviii. xc. c. ciii. cviii. cxi. cxiii. cxv. cxviii. cxxii. cxxiv. cxxvi. cxxxiv. cxxxvi. cxxxviii. cxliv. cxlviii. cxlix. cl. But indeed historical narratives, doctrinal instructions, prophecies, consolations, supplications, praises, and thanksgivings, are often so pleasantly and profitably connected in the same psalm that it is difficult to assign it to one class rather than to another. And what is HISTORICAL, as it relates to David and the Jewish church, is often TYPICAL and so PROPHEPIC, as it relates to Jesus Christ and the gospel church or heavenly state. Many, too, of the SUPPLICATIONS respecting deliverances from or the destruction of enemies, are to be considered as real PREDICTIONS of the events, they being dictated by the inspiration of Him who can declare the end from the beginning.

To this conclusion the Editor was conducted by a process nearly as follows:—

1. From the confident reference to the Psalms made by our Lord himself.
2. From the equally confident reference of the apostles to the same authority; as, for example, amongst many others, Ac. 13. 33, where a psalm not unfrequently represented as descriptive of the instalment of David on his throne in Israel, is distinctly affirmed by the Holy Spirit to be descriptive of the sitting down of the glorified Saviour upon his throne in heaven.

3. By the evident insufficiency of every other principle of interpretation. Throughout the entire series of Psalms, he found so frequently and so constantly the character of some one so righteous, that to apply it to David would outrage all his history; and which, to apply to any mere man, would gainsay all observation and experience. But this righteous character, in all its various forms of exhibition, he found most exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of Christ: the conclusion was therefore inevitable—this character was that of Christ. It was in contemplating the first psalm that this conclusion first forced itself upon his mind. He had often heard that psalm, by what is called the principle of 'accommodation,' expounded as descriptive of the 'happiness of the godly,' contrasted with 'the misery of the ungodly;' and in this interpretation all ordinary authority induced him to acquiesce. Yet still did he feel himself unable to account for the fact—that the description so far exceeded the reality. 'Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful: but his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not wither: and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.' In real life he had never seen such a man; he had never read of such a one amongst the most eminent Scripture saints. Why then did the Spirit of God, in full command of all the words of truth, proceed to draw a moral picture so far surpassing the alleged original? This was a question to which no satisfactory answer was ever presented to his mind. Yet this was the very question that never ceased to recur demanding a solution. True he had found some excellent commentators, amongst whom may be recorded the honoured names of Gill, Romaine, and Horne, who had taught that the opening of this psalm was descriptive of Christ; but whereas for this opinion they assigned no obvious principle of interpretation, he found in it no positive satisfaction, because it appeared as much depending upon the principle of accommodation as that from which he was anxious to retreat. It was while thus puzzled between these two forms of authority, in neither of which he could discover any principle of interpretation, that his mind was earnestly turned to inquire whether any such principle actually existed. In human science he readily and clearly perceived its existence. He saw that if a book contained the names and descriptions of a thousand plants, the accomplished botanist might have some search, but no difficulty, in discovering, amidst the thousand, any plant whatsoever, and declaring its name, provided merely that the description were truly and fully drawn. To the inexperienced eye, many of the plants might appear not merely similar but the same; but the distinctive characteristics would, to the eye of the botanist, be as obvious as the sun at noonday. And were there, in the Scriptures, any such simple principle of interpretation as this, how easily might it be applied in directing our inquiries and settling our conclusions. And was there not such a principle, and was not this the very principle—the mere, but exact correspondence of the recorded description with the object described, and its obvious want of such exact correspondence with any other object? Of the existence and application of this principle the Editor soon found numerous examples in the New Testament; for instance, Ac. 2. 29–36. Now in many copies of the Scriptures lying before him he found this psalm distinctly interpreted as primarily descriptive of David, and only in some secondary or derivative and typical sense applicable to Christ. It is remarkable, however, that the apostle makes no such distinction, but directly affirms that it is a prophecy concerning our Lord. Now from what principle of interpretation does he draw this conclusion? From the simple and obvious principle that it is not true concerning David, 'for David (when he speaks) is not ascended into the heavens;' but is literally true concerning Christ, whom God hath 'raised up,' of which fact the apostles 'all are witnesses.' This principle perceived—and perceived it irresistibly commends itself to adoption—the meaning of the first psalm became most obvious. It did not describe any of the mere children of men from Adam, their head, downward. But the moment Christ is discovered, it is found exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of 'the days of his flesh.' It is, therefore, not a prophecy but a description of Christ—a moral, a spiritual picture of his character drawn by the Holy Ghost, by whom the holy men of old being moved did speak; and by which, before he appeared, the church knew what to expect; and by which, when he did appear, she should have instantly recognized her Lord.

The following are accordingly the principal rules of interpretation by which the Editor has been guided, and to which, however unimportant they may appear, he ventures to solicit the earnest attention of the disciples of the Bible.

1. The Old Testament is interpreted by the Spirit speaking in the New Testament; even as the 'perfect day' more clearly exhibits, but does not change, what is dimly seen at the dawn.

2. When one part of a psalm is thus, by the Holy Ghost, applied to Christ, every other part of the psalm must be applied to him in a way consistent with the analogy of faith in the other Scriptures.

3. When one psalm is found, by quotation in the New Testament, to apply to Christ, every parallel psalm must likewise apply to him.

4. When a description in the whole or part of a psalm is found absolutely inapplicable to any of the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, or other saints, but, at the same time, perfectly applicable to Christ, then, according to the principle above developed, that psalm is not to be interpreted of such patriarch, prophet, apostle, or saint, but of Christ in his person, qualifications, trials, warfare, victories, or kingdom.

5. A large amount of interpretation must, as in the other Scriptures, be referred to the grammatical construction, especially in the bearing of the words 'I, thou, he,' and their plurals, taken in conjunction with the attributes or acts ascribed to them respectively. C.]

[The Book of Psalms is a connecting link between the Old Testament and the New. In them the great purposes and lessons of the Mosaic law are set forth. In them is expressed the very essence of the symbolical institutions and manifold transactions of Providence, through which the members of the old covenant were instructed in the knowledge and trained to the service of the true God. In them the Jew was taught that the form without the spirit was vain—that a spiritual God required spiritual worship. In them the mind of the worshipper was concentrated upon the Messiah—the Shepherd, the Saviour, the King of his people. While the Psalms were thus wondrously adapted for the expression of praise under the old economy, they were no less adapted, from the fulness and clearness of their typical bearings, to give expression to the devout praise, and to give right direction to the spiritual thoughts, of the Christian. There is not a feature in the divine character now developed in the gospel—there is not an aspiration in the heart of the enlightened disciple of Jesus—there is not a matter of vital experience in the divine life—of which the record is not to be found in the Psalms of David. To say that they are wholly Jewish in their cast and character, is totally to mistake their object and to misapprehend their meaning. The poetry, even the Christian poetry of the world, is as far behind the inspired Psalms in lofty Christian sentiment, and in depth and fulness of Christian doctrine, as it is in sublimity of thought and beauty of expression. I would refer in proof to Ps. xxiii. xlv. li. lxxvii. c. ciii.

cxlv. The old and the new meet and blend gloriously in the Psalms;—the old, with its gorgeous but instructive ritual, and its sublime but suggestive imagery; and the new, with its simple but glorious and cheering truths. Thus the Book of Psalms, standing midway between both covenants, and serving equally to the members of each as the handmaid of a living piety, is a witness of the essential identity of their primary and fundamental ideas. The Psalms can never be superseded in the service of the sanctuary. Alike in seasons of deepest sorrow and holiest rapture, the Christian will instinctively turn to them. P.]

PSALM I.

1 The happiness of the godly. 4 The unhappiness of the ungodly.

BLESSED is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.²

2 But his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

3 And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.⁵

4 The ungodly are not so: but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

5 Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For the LORD knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

PSALM II.

1 The kingdom of Christ. 10 Kings are exhorted to accept it.

WHY do the heathen rage,¹ and the people imagine a vain thing?

2 The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the LORD, and against his Anointed, saying,

3 Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.

4 He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the LORD shall have them in derision.

5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure.

PSALM I. Ver. 1. Blessed is the man. Rather, 'O the blessedness of that man,' that man of a thousand, who walketh not in the counsel of the unjust, who withhold God's due of love and obedience; who standeth not in the way of transgressors, to meet them, or converse with them on their own terms; who sitteth not in the seat of the mocker of God's authority and institutions. Has any son of Adam ever realized these three negatives in character but Christ? Is not this then the Christ described by character? C.

Ver. 4. The imagery of the psalm is thoroughly oriental. The 'tree' planted by the rivers of water would not be exposed to the withering influence of a parched soil and scorching sun during the long rainless and cloudless summers. The chaff of the threshing-floor, driven away by the wind from the midst of the rich grain—what a picture of the wicked! P.

Ver. 6. Christ the truth is the way of the righteous to glory, Jn. 14. 6. Satan and lies are the way of the wicked to destruction. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How dangerous is the company of wicked men, and how headlong the progress of sin! They who walk in the counsel of sinners will quickly wait for opportunities of sinning, and will with pleasure accompany with scorners. But precious and useful are the oracles of God, as means to preserve us from temptation, and to animate us to every good word and work. And it is the heavenly-minded and thoughtful Christian that will be the thriving one. It is absurd for saints to study conformity to this world, when God has marked such a difference, such an opposition, between them and the men of it. And when their end answers so exactly to their life and to the glory of the divine perfections. May God's company, God's word, God's influences, God's approbation, and God's final judgment, and the eternity consequent thereon, be ever dear to my heart!

2 Many there be which say of my soul, 'There is no help for him in God.' Selah.

3 But thou, O LORD, art a shield for me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.

The agents of hell, Jews and Gentiles, readily drop their private animosities to harmonize in opposition to him! If his cause is to be run down they cordially unite in the work! And not well-grounded fear, but enraged enmity, makes the princes of the earth to oppose his kingdom, which is not of this world. But in vain are all their contrivances and fury. His church, and every believer, is fixed on a rock, against which the powers of hell and earth can never prevail. Jesus' person, as the only begotten Son of God from eternity, and declared to be such in his resurrection from the dead, and the new covenant made with him, are their everlasting foundation. His intercession, and the saving power of his Spirit, endeavor them to himself. But dreadful is the judgment executed on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, or other opposers! And if the great are not good they shall receive the deeper damnation. O how mixed is the service of Christ on earth! Whilst we rejoice in him and his fullness, we need to tremble on account of our own guilt and corruption, and the snares and dangers that attend us. But holy jealousy and filial fear produce joys unspeakable and full of glory. While the world condemn him and riot in wantonness, let my soul kiss, receive, love, adore, and submit to God's Son; so shall I be blessed in him with all spiritual blessings in time and eternity.

PSALM III. Ver. 2. Selah. Though this word occurs upwards of seventy times in the Psalms, its meaning is much disputed. By some it has been reckoned a musical pause, by others a mark of attention; by others a repetition; by others as equivalent to Amen! while some consider it indicative of the eternal value of the preceding passage. C.

RUINS OF THE SYNAGOGUE AT CAPERNAUM—WHERE CHRIST HEALED THE MAN WITH THE WITHERED HAND. [PSALMS, ii: 7.]—"I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." We give this view of the ruins of the synagogue at Capernaum because it was at Capernaum that our Saviour wrought the majority of his miracles and delivered many of his discourses. The ruins at Capernaum indicate that this was once a place of importance, but now it is in a state of perfect decay and desolation. The ruins extend for half a mile along the coast and as far back into the interior. Here are fragments of ancient walls and foundations. The rank growth of bushes and weeds almost prevent travelers from making careful measurements. There are architectural fragments in the above synagogue which belong to a very ancient period. There are pieces of Corinthian capitals, architraves, elaborate friezes and pedestals.

REFLECTIONS.—Not even kings are exempted from the common miseries of life! But it is hard to support under sore sickness and a wounded spirit at once: and yet God's dearest saints have often the larger shares of them. There is no relief under such a burden but to cast it on God. And when our sins have been great so must be our sorrow. The removal of the sense of God's displeasure must be more earnestly desired, than abatement of or relief from our sufferings. And if God ever regard us, it is neither for our righteousness, nor for our sorrows or sufferings, but for his mercy in Christ. However desirable it is to be with Christ in heaven, saints are to wish for life, while it is for the glory of God and the good of his church. But quickly they who sow in tears shall reap in joy. And if God answer one prayer, he will answer all that follow in faith. He is the same Hearer of prayer yesterday, to-day, and for ever. But close fellowship with God really draws the saints from delight in or intimacy with the wicked: and quick and inevitable ruin awaits their impenitent injurers.

Consequently the statement here made that the wicked shall be turned into 'hell,' is merely an execution of the divine curse against sin.—P.

PSALM X.

1 David complaineth to God of the outrages of the wicked. 12 He prayeth for redress. 16 He professeth his confidence.

WHY standest^a thou afar off, O LORD? why hidest thou thyself in times of trouble?

always appears in its full development of such grace as the believer requires under his peculiar circumstances. Thus to Abraham (Ge. 17: 1) it was 'the Almighty God,' when his defenceless state constantly suggested the need of protection. Again to Moses in the solitudes of Horeb (Ex. 3: 14) it was 'I AM,' when the changes of years suggested the excellence of an unchanging God. But to that same Moses, in the midst of the 'thousands of Israel,' the name is expanded, as it were, to embrace all the necessities of the time, and assure the faith of Moses in discharge of his arduous duties, Ex. 34: 6, 7. And when, in the fulness of the time, God hath sent forth his Son (Ga. 4: 4), and the Spirit of his Son (Ga. 4: 6), the excellence of his name is still further manifested in the baptismal title and the apostolical benediction, revealing and glorifying Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, Mat. 28: 19; 2 Co. 13: 14, C.

Ver. 5. A little lower than the angels. The quotation of ver. 5 by our Lord, Mat. 11: 25; He. 2: 6, 7, evidences, beyond all doubt, that it is a description of Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How glorious is the name of our exalted IMMANUEL, and of God in him! Quickly shall his kingdom fill both heaven and earth, however despicable its oracles, ordinances, and professors now appear to a carnal world. By the weakest instruments he accomplishes his greatest purposes, displays his power and grace, and treads and triumphs over Satan and his votaries. The glories of nature, but especially the graces of redemption, should continually lead our hearts to the contemplation of their glorious Author. How astonishing is it to see so many creatures subjected to miserable man; and especially to behold them all subjected to the once lowly Christ!

PSALM IX. Ver. 1. Of whom the Spirit here speaks, will be evident from considering first, that Ro. 15: 9 ascribes Ps. 18: 9 to Christ. This is the key of the interpretation. Next, with Ps. 18: 49, compare Ps. 57: 9; 35: 13, then all with this opening verse ascribing praise to Jehovah with the whole heart, and with ver. 14, proposing to show forth 'all his praise,' and it will be impossible to deny that the psalm is prophetically spoken in the person of Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—All success granted by God to us ought to animate us to the most hearty praises and thanksgiving for that and all other deliverances. And while prosperity renders us thankful, our chief joy must be in the God of our mercies. It is himself, as the most High in Christ, that is our infallible security against fear or danger. And though the wicked prosper for a time, they are marked for lasting destruction. And when God begins he will make an end. Thrice happy are they, however poor and oppressed, who have this God of Jacob, this high Sovereign, this righteous Judge for the object of their knowledge and trust! The more they know of him the more they will trust in him. Sweet shall be their songs of deliverance in the church in the ordinances below, but especially in the heavenly Zion above. But while God remembers them in mercy, and grants their long waited for requests, fearfully will he manifest his holiness, equity, and power in the temporal and eternal ruin of his and their wicked enemies. But ought we not here chiefly to contemplate, with joy and thankfulness, the blessings of redemption, and the victories of our Redeemer over sin, death, and hell, Jews, heathens, and anti-christians, and all other incorrigible opposers; and to believe that we through him shall be more than conquerors!

PSALM X. Ver. 1. Read Ps. 22: 1, 18, which the Holy Spirit expressly applies to Christ, then compare the whole of Ps. xxii. with Ps. x., and their perfect parallelism will clearly show that this psalm is a description of Christ cruelly persecuted by Herod, ungratefully betrayed by Judas, impiously denounced by Caiaphas, and unjustly condemned by Pilate. C.

Ver. 9. The poor, that is, the poor in spirit, whose hearts have been emptied of all vanity and self-righteousness, Mat. 5: 3, C.

Ver. 10. The true meaning of this verse seems to be 'crushed, he sinks down; the poor man falleth under (the power of) the mighty.' The reference is not to oppressor, but to the oppressed; not to the tyrant, but the victim. P.—Strong ones. Literally exemplified in that affected humility with which the Inquisition was wont to deliver the martyrs of truth to the secular arm, and hypocritically to commend her victims to mercy. C.

Ver. 12. Being the tyranny and power of the wicked, and the helplessness of the oppressed, the psalmist appeals to God. He alone, infinite in wisdom and power, can succour and save the poor and needy. P.

Ver. 15. The appeal is here made to God as a righteous ruler. It is justice and not vengeance that the writer asks. There is nothing either harsh or cruel in justice. P.

Ver. 16. Heathen are perished out of his land. This expression refers the fulfilment of the psalm to that time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, Re. 11: 15, and which shall eventuate in that glorious day, when 'Babylon shall be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all,' Re. 19: 21, C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a heavy burden to an exercised saint are the hidings and frowns of his God! and the greatest saints undergo the severest trials of their faith. Men's persecutions, or Satan's temptations, often unite with God's absence to distress the soul. Behold into what dreadful monsters sin has transformed men—proud—persecutors—boasters—covetous—prayerless—careless of God and religion—disobedient—impenitent—insolent—secure—profane—treacherous—heretical—murderous—hypocritical—blasphemous! But their wickedness is all before the Lord. And to revenge their affronting of himself, to honour his people's relation to, dependence on, and expectations from him, and to manifest his wonted readiness to appear in their behalf, he will quickly arise to punish them. And when God breaks the power, and in awful judgment manifests the wickedness, c: their enemies, he deals kindly with his people. When the wicked are cast down, they are lifted up to safety, holiness, and honour. And he usually pours out upon them a remarkable spirit of humility, and of earnest supplication, as the mean of ushering in their deliverance.

4 This psalm is a record of the victory of faith over weakness of body and anguish of soul. Like Job, the psalmist is afflicted with sickness, which has prostrated his energies, and threatens to cut short his career of service in God's cause by an untimely death, and is at the same time assailed by persecutors, who, as birds of prey over the sinking traveller, exult over the progress of his malady, and long for his death, as a crowning triumph in their war of persecution against the godly.—P.

2 For, lo, the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may privily¹ shoot at the upright in heart.²

3 If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?

4 The LORD is in his holy temple, the LORD's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men.

5 The LORD trieth the righteous: but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his soul hateth.

6 Upon the wicked he shall rain snares,³ fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup.

7 For the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright.

PSALM XII.

1 David, destitute of human comfort, craveth help of God. 3 He comforteth himself in the assurance of God's judgments on the wicked, 6 and in the faithfulness of his promises.

To the chief musician upon Sheminith, A psalm of David. HELP, LORD; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men.

2 They speak vanity every one with his neighbour: with flattering lips and with a double heart² do they speak.

3 The LORD shall cut off all flattering lips, and the tongue that speaketh proud things.³

4 Who have said, With our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own: who is lord over us?

5 For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the LORD; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him.⁵

6 The words of the LORD are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times.

7 Thou shalt keep them, O LORD, thou shalt preserve them⁶ from this generation for ever.

8 The wicked walk on every side, when the vilest men are exalted.⁷

PSALM XIII.

1 David complaineth of God's delay to help him. 3 He prayeth for preventing grace. 5 He trusteth in the divine mercy.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

HOW long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? for ever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?²

2 How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

3 Consider and hear me, O LORD my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death;

Ver. 6. Snares, fire, and brimstone, &c., signify all the terrible and unavoidable judgments which God executes upon the wicked in time and eternity; such as he executed upon Saul and his agents.

Ver. 1. 'This psalm must be referred to the early times of David's life, when he had to maintain an unequal struggle against the unrelenting jealousy of Saul. We! might his friends despair: they were already imperilled on every side

4 Lest⁹ mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

5 But^h I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.

6 I^h will sing unto the LORD, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.³

PSALM XIV.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their conscience. 7 He glorieth in the salvation of God.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

THE fool^h hath said in his heart, There is no God. They are corrupt; they have done abominable works; there is none that doeth good.

2 The LORD looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God.

3 They are all⁹ gone aside; they are all together become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 Have⁹ all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who^h eat up my people as they eat bread, and call not upon the LORD.

5 There^h were they in great fear:² for^h God is in the generation of the righteous.³

6 Ye have^h shamed the counsel of the poor, because the LORD is his refuge.

7 Oh that^h the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! when the LORD bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

3 The psalm closes with expressions of joy, thankfulness, and triumph. Though it begins with depression and sadness, it ends with joy. This is often observable in the Psalms. In the commencement it often occurs that the mind is overwhelmed with sorrow, and there is earnest pleading with God. Light, under the influence of prayer, breaks in gradually upon the soul. The cloud disperses, the darkness disappears; new views of the goodness and mercy of God are imparted, an assurance of his favour is brought to the soul; confidence in his mercy springs up in the heart; and the psalm that began with sorrowful complaining, ends with the language of praise and joy (Barnes).—P.

PSALM XV.

The proper character of a citizen of Zion.

A psalm of David.

LORD, who^h shall abide¹ in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

2 He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart.

3 He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh² up a reproach against his neighbour.

4 In whose eyes^a a vile person is contemned; but he honoureth them that fear the LORD. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.³

5 He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

PSALM XVI.

1 David, in distrust of merits, and hatred of idolatry, fleeth to God for preservation. 5 He sheweth the hope of his calling, of a future resurrection, and life everlasting.

Michtam¹ of David.

PRESERVE me, O God: for in thee do I put my trust.²

2 O my soul, thou hast said³ unto the LORD, Thou art my LORD: my goodness⁵ extendeth not to thee;

3 But⁴ to the saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent,⁶ in whom is all my delight.

4 Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god:⁷ their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take up their names into my lips.

by the treachery of an unscrupulous foe, and now they saw opening before them an interminable vista of dangers, which would be the lot of the righteous in a time of anarchy and misrule. But the cowardly fears of his friends, so far from shaking David's trust in God, only gave him an occasion for pouring forth in song the firm and simple faith with which his heart was full. The psalm divides itself into two parts:—the first part (ver. 1-3) contains the questions put to David by timid followers, suggesting flight. The second part contains David's reply, expressing unshaken confidence in God. P.

Ver. 6. So he rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah, which are 'set forth for an example.' Jude 7, and so will he punish the finally impenitent in 'the lake of fire,' Re. 20, 15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The saints' sorest temptations come as often from carnal friends as from their inveterate enemies; and often the most upright and blameless meet with the greatest malignity on earth. When wicked rulers have once unhinged the fundamental laws of equity, the greatest virtue often exposes men to the greatest danger. But while God is in Christ, in the church, and in heaven, they who trust in him need never despair. Nothing escapes his notice, and nothing shall escape without a due reward. While in his afflicting the righteous he but tries them for their purification and honour, the holiness and equity of his nature demand that his unavoidable judgments should in a terrible manner reward the wicked.

PSALM XII. Ver. 1. The speaker here is 'poor and needy,' ver. 5. Now to find who he is, consult, first, Ps. 40, 17, then ver. 6-8, and compare He. 10, 7, 9; and thus finding that 'the poor and needy' is Christ, there will be no difficulty in discovering that this psalm is a prayer of Christ. C.

Ver. 6. Seven being the amount of a perfect week, is the emblem of anything perfected by successive acts or exhibitions; so silver is refined from the alloy of baser metals by successive exposures to the fire; and so is the word of God separated from all the alloy of human misconceptions and errors, till it stands forth unadulterated truth—the truth as it is in Jesus. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is fearfully ominous when those distinguished saints, who support nations or churches, are removed by death, while none are raised up to fill their room. Perilous are the times when piety towards God and integrity towards men cease—when all men seek their own, not the things of Jesus Christ—when hypocrites by fair speeches deceive the simple! But pride must have a fall, either before the throne of grace, or into the depths of hell! And though God for a time may seemingly overlook his people, he will never forget, disregard, or cast them off. He best knows when to deliver; and if we have but faith he will never fail. When the saints' night of trouble is at the darkest, and their prayer fervent, their deliverance is near. While God's pure and precious promises stand fast in Christ, no increase, activity, or malice of wicked men shall ever be able utterly to destroy or deceive his people.

PSALM XIII. Ver. 2. The 'Man of sorrows,' who knew no joy but 'the joy set before him,' here speaks while he 'endures the cross,' and bears 'the contradiction of sinners.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—How painful to an exercised believer is the sense of God's absence and frowns! An hour is an age without his love! But the most precious saints are often exercised with long and constant sorrows: and their anxiety and vain contrivances to help themselves will but add to their burden, entangle them more and more, and bring them to the brink of despair. But though God hide, and frown, and smite, his love for all men cannot be broken. Let Satan and his agents triumph as they may in their fall, there is full hope of their recovery; nay, it is at hand. Trust in God's mercy and prayers poured into his bosom will quickly issue in great deliverance and joy.

PSALM XIV. REFLECTIONS.—How desperately wicked are human hearts! If all their thoughts were manifested, how horrible and shameful the sight! Atheism in heart is the source of all our corruption in life! Men are very similar in sin, particularly in inward corruption. And there is great reason to bless God for the riches of his grace, if anything good is implanted in us by his Spirit. How absurdly, and against conscience, must men act when they eat up with pleasure, hate, reproach, persecute, and oppress the people of God, or neglect prayer to him! Or when they attempt to shame and banter poor saints out of their religion and dependence on him! But if God be for us, who can be against us? Secret terrors shall apprehend our most jovial persecutors. How fervent are right desires for salvation through Christ; and how ravishing our enjoyment of it! For now is come Jesus, and his salvation and strength! Let Jews and Gentiles magnify the Lord, and rejoice in God their Saviour.

PSALM XV. Ver. 2. Let him that would search the Scriptures, not to give them a meaning, but to find it, read Je. 17, 9; Ro. 3, 10, 11, 19, and compare them with the character described in this verse, and then say, Is not this certainly the Christ? C.

Ver. 4. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. Beareth true testimony, even when he knows it will be turned to his hurt. This Christ did when adjured by the high-priest, and, on his own testimony, perverted by the high-priest and council, the righteous was condemned, Mat. 26, 63-66. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Professors of religion have great need to examine themselves. Many have a place in God's church below who will never be admitted into his holy heaven. And if we would know our true state, God's word must be the sole standard, and his Spirit the great director and manager of our trial. It is not fair words, nor high pretences, but uniform obedience in heart and life to God's law, that will prove the reality of our grace. We must exercise ourselves to keep a conscience void of offence towards God and man; to keep good company; and to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them. Though our holiness and virtue be not the foundation of our unchangeable happiness, they are the marks of our being rooted and grounded in Christ, our infallible establisher.

6 In^r my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: 'he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

7 Then 'the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.⁵

8 There went up a 'smoke out of his⁶ nostrils,⁷ and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

9 He 'bowed the heavens also, and came down: and darkness⁸ was under his feet.

10 And 'he rode upon a cherub, and did fly; yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 He^r made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 At 'the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed, hail-stones and coals of fire.

13 The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hail-stones and coals of fire.

14 Yea, 'he sent out his arrows, and scattered them; and he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

15 Then^b the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.⁹

16 He^c sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of 'many waters.

17 He 'delivered me from my strong enemy,¹ and from them which hated me: for they were too 'strong for me.

18 They^b prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

19 He^c brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 The LORD 'rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For 'I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands in his 'eyesight.⁵

25 With^a the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful; with an upright man thou wilt show thyself upright;

26 With the pure thou wilt show thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt show thyself froward.⁶

27 For^a thou wilt save the afflicted⁷ people; but wilt bring down high looks.

28 For^a thou wilt light my candle:⁸ the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For^a by thee I have run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

30 As for God, 'his way is perfect: 'the word of the LORD is 'tried: 'he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 For^a who is God save the LORD? or who is a rock save our God?

32 I^b is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect.

33 He^c maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places.¹

34 He^d teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me 'the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and thy gentleness 'hath made me great.²

36 Thou hast 'enlarged my steps under me, that my feet³ did not slip.

37 I^e have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them; neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have wounded them, that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou 'hast girded me with strength unto the battle: thou hast subdued⁴ under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me 'the necks of mine enemies; that I might destroy them that hate me.⁵

41 They^f cried, but there was none to save them; even unto the LORD, but he answered them not.⁶

42 Then did I 'beat them small as the dust before the wind: I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets.

43 Thou hast delivered me from 'the strivings of the people; 'and thou hast made me the malice of Satan and his agents, cast down their power, a prayer to which it is not easy to discover how either infidelity or sentimental Pharisaism can object. C.

Ver. 15. The psalmist here contrasts his hopes and aspirations with those of the mere worldling. He does not rest his happiness on temporal things. He looks beyond earth to a heavenly inheritance and home. The presence and favour of God can alone satisfy him. He hopes for and believes in a participation in the divine nature and graces. The doctrine of a future state and of a resurrection is here clearly shadowed forth. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who, when translated by men, have the testimony of a good conscience to their uprightness before God: his providence will manifest injured innocence at last! And happy are they who in all their trials improve God's word as their preservative from evil; and who, assisted by his gracious influence, watch over their heart, their tongue, their feet, cleaving to that which is good, and abhorring that which is evil! But not the strongest saint hath a fund of grace to support himself, without constant supplies from Jesus Christ our living fountain. And a deep sense of our own weakness and insufficiency is the surest way to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Every saint walks in a slippery path, where many watch for his halting. He ought therefore always to watch and pray that he faint not. Our salvation is by faith, and is of infinite love from first to last. In vain Satan rages against those who put all their trust in God. No luxurious, proud, active, crafty, or cruel devourers shall ever pluck them out of his hand. Trials are God's sword and hand, by which he corrects his people, or manages, in his providence, as is best. And how wretched are the wicked in all affluence and wealth, as these things without God become their everlasting misery! But happy are they who through their much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God! Happy they whose transient views of God, and imperfect likeness to him, issue at last in endless and immediate vision of him, and in perfect conformity to his image!

PSALM XVIII. Ver. 3. Mine enemies. Whose enemies? A somewhat similar psalm is said to have been spoken by David on his deliverance from all his enemies and from Saul; and the day was most appropriate for celebrating, not typically, but prophetically, the glorious deliverance of Messiah. For that David does not speak in his own person is obvious from comparing Ro. 15. 8 with

The excellency of the divine law.

PSALM XX.

1 The church bleaseth the king in his exploits. 7 Her confidence in God's succour.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

THE LORD^a hear thee in the day of trouble,¹ the name of the God of Jacob defend thee.²

2 Send thee help³ from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee⁴ out of Zion.

3 Remember all thy offerings, and accept thy burnt-sacrifice. Selah.⁵

4 Grant⁶ thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

5 We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the LORD fulfil all thy petitions.

6 Now know I that the LORD saveth his anointed: he will hear him from his holy heaven⁶ with the saving strength of his right hand.⁷

7 Some⁸ trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will remember the name⁸ of the LORD our God.

8 They are brought down and fallen: but we are risen, and stand upright.

9 Save, LORD: let the king hear us when we call.

PSALM XXI.

1 A thanksgiving for victory. 7 Confidence of further success.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

The king^a shall joy in thy strength,¹ O LORD; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!²

2 Thou^c hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.³

3 For^d thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.⁴

4 He^e asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever.⁵

5 His^g glory is great in thy salvation: honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him.

6 For^b thou hast made him most blessed for ever: thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

7 For^k the king trusteth in the LORD; and through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved.

8 Thine^l hand shall find out all thine enemies; thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.

9 Thou^m shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them.

PSALM XXII.

1 David complaineth in great discouragement. 9 He prayeth in great distress. 22 He praiseth God for mercy shown him.

To the chief musician upon Aijeleth Shahar, A psalm of David.

MY God,^a my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?

2 O my God, I cry in the day-time, but thou hearest not; and in the night-season, and am not silent.³

3 But^c thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel.⁴

4 Our fathers trusted in thee: they trusted, and thou didst deliver them.

5 They cried unto thee, and were delivered: they trusted in thee, and were not confounded.

6 But I am a worm,⁵ and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people.

7 All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying,

8 He trusted on the LORD⁶ that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him.⁸

9 But thou art he that took me out of the womb: thou didst make me hope⁹ when I was upon my mother's breasts.

10 I was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.

11 Be^p not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is none to help.¹

12 Many^q bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

13 They^r gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

14 I am poured out like water, and all my bones are out of joint:³ my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.

15 My^t strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my

S STONE CARVED WORK IN THE SYNAGOGUE, CAPERNAUM — WHERE CHRIST HEALED PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND MANY OTHERS. [PSALMS, xxi : 1.]—
 "The king shall joy in thy strength, O Lord; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!" This first verse of the twenty-first Psalm is accepted as a prophecy relating to the mission of Christ. We give to illustrate this portion of Scripture a piece of stone work in the synagogue at Capernaum. This view was photographed on Wednesday,

May 9, 1894. It was with difficulty that we reached the site of this synagogue that originally stood in Capernaum, because of the deep tangled mass of weeds and thorn bushes. The relic we see is supposed to have formed part of the synagogue which was found in Capernaum at the time of our Savior, and in which he delivered many of his discourses. Christ performed more miracles in Capernaum than in any other place. We are, as we stand in the presence of this stone, at least upon ground made sacred by the words and deeds of our Lord.

to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.²

2 Hear^d the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee, when I lift up my hands toward thy holy oracle.³

3 Draw^g me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity, which speak peace to their neighbours, but mischief is in their hearts.

4 Give^t them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedness of their endeavours: give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert.

5 Because^t they regard not the works of the LORD, nor the operation of his hands,⁴ he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

6 Blessed^k be the LORD, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

7 The^t LORD is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him.

8 The LORD is their^s strength,⁶ and he is the saving strength⁷ of his anointed.

9 Save^o thy people, and bless thine inheritance: feed⁸ them also, and lift them up for ever.

PSALM XXIX.

1 David exhorteth princes to give glory to God, 3 by reason of his power, 11 and protection of his people.

A psalm of David.

GIVE unto^a the LORD, O ye mighty,¹ give unto the LORD glory and strength.

2 Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name:² worship^b the LORD in the beauty³ of holiness.

3 The voice of the LORD is upon the waters: the God of glory thundereth: the LORD is upon many⁴ waters.⁵

4 The voice of the LORD is powerful;⁶ the voice of the LORD is full of majesty.⁷

5 The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars; yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon.

6 He maketh them also to skip like a calf; Lebanon^d and Sirion like a young unicorn.

7 The voice of the LORD divideth⁸ the flames of fire.

cavils is easy—this is that very thing which God will do—and which therefore the believer, even Christ in the days of his flesh, might justly pray him to do. C.—This is a prayer for justice. It is surely right to seek it and to pray for it. The psalmist desires that by the execution of a righteous judgment the wicked may be restrained from evil, and God's people saved from persecution. There is no evidence here of malice or vindictiveness. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Deep distress should awaken strong cries to God. Not the Jewish holy of holies, but Christ, is our oracle, in which dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and through him our prayers are sure to speed. What a burden to exercised saints are sin and sinners while they live in this world! Seducing sinners are always busy; and they who would avoid their ruin must shun their ways. But great are the thankful praises which saints owe to their God for the mercies which have been granted in answer to their prayer, and which faith assures them he will grant. And what almighty power and grace Jesus Christ, and every one of his true members, have engaged on their side to prevent their miscarriage! Clusters of well-connected and everlasting blessings are secured by God for his people. And great should be the joy they have in, and care for, one another's spiritual and eternal welfare.

PSALM XXIX. Ver. 2. Beauty of holiness. A call to worship either in the beauty conferred by holiness, that is, by separation from worldly defilement, Ja. 1.27; Ro. 12.2, and dedication of body and spirit to God, Ro. 12.1; or to worship him amidst the emblematic beauties of the holy place, in a ritual every jot of which was of divine appointment. C.

Ver. 3. Voices. Any voice in nature that God employs to manifest his power, may truly be called his, because all creation and its laws are his—a mere emanation of his will, sustained by the energies of eternal power. C.

Ver. 9. The worship and temple here are the same as in ver. 2; and the reference seems to be to the influence of storms, irresistibly to lead man to the only refuge of a weak creature—the bended knee, the earnest cry, the throne of grace, the arm of the Almighty. C.—By the 'temple' is here probably meant the

PSALM XXXI.

1 David, showing his confidence in God craveth his help. 7 He rejoiceth in God's mercy. 9 He prayeth in his calamity. 19 He praiseth God for his goodness.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

IN thee, O LORD, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness.¹

2 Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou my strong rock,² for an house of defence to save me.

3 For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore³ for thy name's sake, lead me, and guide me.

4 Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art my strength.

5 Into thine hand I commit my spirit:³ thou hast redeemed⁴ me, O LORD God of truth.

6 I have hated them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the LORD.

7 I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for thou hast considered my trouble; thou hast known my soul in adversities;

8 And⁵ hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my feet in a large room.

9 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble: mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing:⁵ my strength faileth because of mine iniquity,⁶ and my bones are consumed.

11 I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.⁷

12 I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind; I am like a broken vessel.⁸

PSALM XXXII.

1 Blessedness consisteth in remission of sins. 3 Confession of sins giveth ease to the conscience. 8 God's promises bring joy.

A psalm of David, Maschil.¹

BLESSED is he whose "transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."²

2 Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and ⁱⁿ whose spirit there is no guile.

3 When^c I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.

4 For^d day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.

5 I^e acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. ^gI said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.

6 For^h this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found:³ surely in the "floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.

7 Thou^j art my hiding-place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; ^kthou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.

8 I^l will instruct thee,⁴ and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye.⁵

10 Many^o sorrows shall be to the wicked: but^p he that trusteth in the LORD, mercy shall compass him about.

11 Be^q glad in the LORD, and rejoice, ye righteous: and shout for joy, all ye that are upright^r in heart.

PSALM XXXIII.

1 God is to be praised for his goodness, 6 for his power, 12 and for his providence. 20 Confidence is therefore to be placed in God.

ledged by those who will not agree patiently to search the Scriptures. But let those who determine by the grace of God to examine, see Ps. 40. 12, compare Ps. 32. 3, 5, and then ask, who speaks? Ps. 40. 12. To find the answer, compare ver. 6-8 with He. 10. 5-7, and the speaker is found to be Christ. But how could Christ confess sin, seeing he knew no sin? He confessed the sins of his mystical body the church, Ep. 1. 22, 23; 5. 30. Those sins which he bore in his own body on the tree, 1 Pe. 2. 24. Those "iniquities of us all," which the Lord laid upon him, Is. 53. 6, 11, 12. Sins and iniquities that were his by onlaying and bearing, as his righteousness is ours by gift and impartation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful is the nature of sin! It, and nothing else, renders us miserable. But rich is the grace of God, and efficacious the merit of Jesus' blood, which freely removes it. And justification through faith in Christ constantly promotes integrity and holiness of heart and life! But the remains of sin must be purged out by sore troubles and wounding convictions. For there is a close connection between gospel repentance and pardon of sin. It is not, however, our repentance, but God's mercy in Christ and our faith, that is the cause of our pardon. Hopeful is a sinner's case when he is once brought to humble applications to a gracious God, who is more ready to pardon than we are to pray for it.

They who seek him, even in trouble, shall surely find him; the more imminently terrible their danger, the more shall his grace and love be magnified in their salvation. And it is no small encouragement to their seeking of God in their distress, that others, like themselves, have found mercy in like cases. But great is the protection, preservation, deliverance, instruction, and direction which believers in Christ constantly find, while the impenitent are loaded with sorrows everlasting and unnumbered. It is necessary then to receive his instructions, and to bend before his warnings, that we may rejoice in his mercy and triumph in his praise.

PSALM XXXIII. Ver. 12. This is a national psalm, an expression of faith by an entire people. And though it is descriptive of a state never yet fully realized, the divine counsel will not be frustrated; and not merely individuals, but nations and peoples, shall yet be born of the Spirit to national salvation. Ro. 11. 7-26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How great, glorious, and good is our God! and as extensive is the matter and reasonable the exercise of our praise. All that God is in himself, all that he hath declared in his word, all that he hath done in his works, is the matter of his gift and

PSALM XXXIV. Ver. 5. They looked—Who? the humble, ver. 2. Boothroyd, however, and most versions, render the verse 'Look to him (the Lord), and be enlightened, and your faces shall not be ashamed;' and then ver. 6 introduces 'this poor (rather this afflicted) man' (Christ) as an encouraging specimen of the power of faith and prayer. PLEAD ^amy cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me; fight against them that fight against me.¹

2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.²

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: ^bsay unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 Let ^cthem be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

5 Let^d them be as chaff before the wind: ^eand let the angel of the LORD chase them.

6 Let their way be dark and slippery:³ and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

7 For^f without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8 Let^g destruction come upon him at unawares;⁴ and ^hlet his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall:

9 Andⁱ my soul shall be joyful in the LORD: it shall rejoice in his salvation.

VIA DOLOROSA—OVER WHICH CHRIST WALKED TO THE CROSS OF CALVARY. [PSALMS, XXXV: 7.]—"For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul." The Via Dolorosa is known as the mournful way over which our Saviour passed from the judgment hall to Calvary. This is a gloomy street where are arched passages, and an honored stone that has been so often pressed by the lips of pious pilgrims.

It is very interesting, however, from the standpoint of the historian and the artist, for from this neighborhood the original ideas have been secured which take form in some of the most celebrated works of European art. The way begins with the palace of Pilate and ends in the church of the Holy Sepulcher. At the commencement of the Via Dolorosa there once stood the Scala Santa or staircase which was removed by Constantine to the Basilica of Saint John Lateran in Rome.

wink with the eye that hate me without a cause.

20 For^b they speak not peace: but they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land.

21 Yea,^a they opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aha, aha! our eye hath seen it.

22 This thou hast seen, O LORD: keep not silence. O LORD, be not far from me.

23 Stir^a up thyself, and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, my God and my LORD.

24 Judge^a me, O LORD my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not rejoice over me.

25 Let them not say in their hearts, Ah, so would we have it:^a let them not say, We have swallowed him up.

26 Let^a them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt: let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify themselves against me.

27 Let^a them shout for joy, and be glad, that favour my righteous cause:^a yea, let them say continually, Let the LORD be magnified, which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant.

28 And my tongue shall speak of thy righteousness and of thy praise all the day long.

PSALM XXXVI.

1 The grievous state of the wicked. 5 The excellency of God's mercy. 10 David prayeth for favour to God's children.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David the servant of the LORD.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found^a to be hateful.^a

3 The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

4 He deviseth mischief^a upon his bed; he setteth himself in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil.

5 Thy^a mercy, O LORD, is in the heavens; and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.^a PSALM XXXVII.

David exhorteth to patience and confidence in God, by the different states of the godly and the wicked.

A psalm of David.

FRET not^a thyself because of evil-doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity.^a

2 For^a they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

3 Trust^a in the LORD, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily^a thou shalt be fed.

4 Delight^a thyself also in the LORD; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

5 Commit^a thy way unto the LORD:^a trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass:

6 And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day.

7 Rest in the LORD,^a and wait patiently for him: fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass.

8 Cease^a from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in any wise to do evil.

9 For^a evil-doers shall be cut off: but those fect, what unceasing provision is made for them that fear him! Though the most ravenous beasts and covetous men should be pinched and starved, none that fear him shall ever want, either for soul or body, what is for their good. It is a great mercy when children are from their infancy carefully instructed in the word and ways of God. And negligent parents and masters will have a heavy charge to answer in the day of God, if for lack of knowledge their children and servants eternally perish. How strictly are holiness and happiness connected! But marvellous is God's love to his people, in dwelling with them, delighting in them, hearing their requests, and in delivering, preserving, and redeeming them. And who can support under his indignation against the wicked! But let me not here forget his kindness to us in Christ, and the justice which he did and will measure to Jewish, heathen, antichristian, and other opposers.

and the interpretation must depend upon discovering who he is. Compare therefore ver. 19 with Jn. 15. 25, and the speaker is found to be Christ. And never lived there another who could say, 'They hated me without a cause.' See also ver. 7. C. Ver. 8. But if the speaker be Christ, how can he thus pray against his enemies, seeing that he teaches us to love and to pray for them? This is a question originating in great inattention to things that differ. Phil. 1. 10. For (1) does not this prayer detail what God in judgment will do? And can there be any reason against praying him to do his own will? But (2) can any one neglect to pray that Satan's kingdom may be destroyed? And what is there in these words but a prayer for God's righteous judgment upon Satan's causeless enmity? C. Ver. 13. Sick. Sin is a sickness of the soul, a sickness unto death, against which no physician but the Conqueror of death can prevail. But such a physician is Jesus, Mat. 9. 12. C. Ver. 22. O Lord, be not far from me. Distant in space, God can never be; but distant in time he helps frequently. For thus he tries the faith and increases the glory of his servants, and finally magnifies his own grace and sanctity. Ver. 24. Here is another evidence that the speaker who prays to be judged in righteousness is no other than Christ the righteous; for every conscious sinner must rather cry for mercy. See also ver. 27. C.

cruelly persecuted. But a good God to plead their cause, and a good conscience to witness their integrity, are enough to comfort them. And a time is at hand when God will sufficiently recompense all the injuries done to them. However little persecutors see it, their feet stand on a slippery place, and a dreadful pit of ruin is just before them. And though we may not wish evil to our worst enemies, yet we may safely wish confusion to the implacable enemies of Christ and his church. Base ingratitude grievously wounds a generous spirit, when the greatest services meet with an ill requital. But let men use us as they will, it is our duty to pray for them. Though our kindness may be lost upon them, and our prayers slighted by them, they shall not return without a blessing to ourselves. And if we are made the reproach of the meanest, we but fill up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ. But short-lived is the triumphing, fearful and lasting the misery, of those who are enemies to Christ and his people; while ravishing and lasting are the prosperity that wait upon the LORD, they shall inherit the earth.⁵

10 For^a yet a little while,⁶ and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

11 But^a the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

12 The^m wicked plotteth⁷ against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

13 Theⁿ LORD shall laugh at him: for he seeth that⁸ his day is coming.

14 The^p wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay such as be of upright conversation.⁸

15 Their^q sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.

16 A^r little⁹ that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

17 For^s the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the LORD upholdeth the righteous.

18 The^t LORD knoweth the days of the upright, and their inheritance shall be¹⁰ for ever.¹

19 They shall not be ashamed in the evil time: and¹¹ in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

20 But¹² the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the LORD shall be as the¹² fat of lambs:³ they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.

21 The^v wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth.

22 For¹³ such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

23 The^a steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD; and he delighteth in his way.

6 This is the grand lesson of the psalm. Righteousness alone can secure for man true and lasting prosperity and peace. cast down: for the LORD upholdeth him with his hand.

25 I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

26 He^a is ever⁴ merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed.

27 Depart⁵ from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore.⁵

28 For⁶ the LORD loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever: but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

29 The⁷ righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30 The⁸ mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

31 The⁹ law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps⁶ shall slide.⁷

32 The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.

33 The¹⁰ LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged.

34 Wait¹¹ on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

35 I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay-tree.⁸

36 Yet¹² he passed away, and, lo, he was not; yea, I sought him, but he could not be found.

37 Mark¹³ the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But¹⁴ the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But¹⁵ the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

40 And¹⁶ the LORD shall help them, and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.

and joys of the godly in the kind delight and favour of their God! All our comforts come from his hand, through active faith in his Son; and therefore he ought to be praised on their account.

PSALM XXXVI. Ver. 1. The form of this sentence is involved. It is dramatic, and may be explained in this way:—The writer introduces himself as scrutinizing the character and conduct of the wicked. His heart pronounces judgment upon them; and the substance of his judgment is, that they are not influenced by the fear of God. Pleasure, passion, and worldly aggrandizement are the great mainsprings of their actions. P.

Ver. 4. The whole description well applies to Judas, into whom Satan entered, and taught to betray his Lord, Lu. 22: 3. C.

Ver. 6. Great mountains. Conspicuous from afar, elevated above the clouds, the battlements of kingdoms, the storehouses of inexhaustible wealth, the immovable monuments of almighty power. C.

Ver. 9. In thy light, &c. God dwells in light, 1 Ti. 6: 16. God is light, 1 Jn. 1: 5. In Christ was light, 1 Jn. 1: 9. In Christ, therefore, God's light, the believer sees light—the light of doctrine in ignorance, 2 Pe. 1: 19, and of immortality in death, 2 Ti. 1: 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Living in open sin is a certain mark of an unregenerate heart. And how deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, are the hearts of men by nature! What self-flattery—what abominable thoughts and devices—what false and mischievous words—what horrid deeds proceed from them! Night and day they perpetrate crimes. And none are worse than apostate professors: their deliberate wickedness shows the power of the devil uncontrolled within them! And they who, when awake on their beds, have their thoughts unoccupied in God's words, will find the devil at hand to suggest evil to them. But how high—how fixed—how unsearchable are the excellencies of God! Unbounded is his mercy—unchangeable his veracity—conspicuous his justice—unsearchable his words—and awful his works! Benevolent and extensive is his providential care. Precious and engaging his love. And powerfully considerate and delightful are the provision, the comfort, the life, the light, the love, the righteousness, which he bestows upon all people. But inevitable is the ruin and intolerable the everlasting misery of all who reject them.

PSALM XXXVII. Ver. 1. The preceptive parts of this psalm select an individual as the object of instruction—the Spirit speaking forth the observation and experience of an aged prophet. That the Spirit directly addresses Christ, will be evident from ver. 6, for there never was any other who had righteousness to bring forth. See Ro. 3: 10; 1 Jn. 2: 1. And through the perfect instructions addressed to him his members learn the nature and obligations of universal holiness. C.

Ver. 23. Good man. 'Good' is not in the original, and the Hebrew signifies 'a mighty man,' even the mighty Lord, the King of glory, described Ps. 24: 8, the man Christ Jesus, who with 'clean hands and a pure heart,' ascends into the 'hills of God,' and abides in the 'holy place' a Priest for ever, He. 6: 20; 7: 24–28. C.

Ver. 25. Many have stumbled at this unlimited statement, for they have seen the children of believers reduced to want. But children are not mentioned, but seed—which signifies an entire race—a stream of life from the fountain of the righteous. Now, in this sense, the true sense, all experience verifies the statement. The lazzaroni of Naples are a race of beggars; their birth, their heirship, their education, their inheritance, is beggary. So are many of the hapless people called gypsies. But, during all their dispersion and calamities, the Jews have never become a seed, a race of beggars; their employments, alas! are often low and ignoble, but still they are a race of workers, and as a seed they beg not. The same important fact is ever verified in the history of true Christians. There is not, there never was, there cannot be, a seed, a race of Christian beggars. C.

Ver. 38. 'Keep in innocence, and regard uprightness; for the perfect man hath a posterity, but the rebellious shall be destroyed together; the posterity of the wicked shall be cut off' (Horsley). This amendment seems necessary, for that 'the end of the wicked shall be cut off,' is scarcely intelligible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Even eminent saints are apt to fret at the prosperity of the wicked—and yet how little reason is there for it! Be the apparent happiness of the wicked what it will in this world, it is mingled with the poisoning curse of God: it gives no solid satisfaction while it lasts, and it is quickly at an end. And never is their ruin nearer than when their prosperity spreads and flourishes like a green bay-tree. It brings them to everlasting wrath, and hastens them rapidly to the suffering of endless woe. But godliness hath great gain, having the promise of this life and of that which is to come. If rooted and grounded in Christ, we trust and delight in the Lord, and wait on him in the faith of his promises and obedience to his laws,

PSALM XXXVIII.

David moveth God to take compassion of his sad condition, confessing his sins to have been the cause of it.

A psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thy wrath; neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.
2 For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin.

4 For mine iniquities are gone over mine head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me.

5 My wounds stink, and are corrupt, because of my foolishness.

6 I am troubled; I am bowed down greatly; I go mourning all the day long.

7 For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease; and there is no soundness in my flesh.

8 I am feeble and sore broken: I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart.

9 LORD, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee.

10 My heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me.

11 My lovers and my friends stand aloof from my sore; and my kinsmen stand afar off.

PSALM XXXIX.

1 David's care not to offend with his tongue. 4 His reflections upon the shortness and vanity of human life, which led him to hope in God. 8 He prayeth for pardon and comfort before his death.

I SAID, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my extensive and glorious shall be our inheritance—pleasure, support, honour, safety, plenty, protection, peace, happy death, and everlasting salvation.

PSALM XXXVIII. Ver. 1. There is not on record such another memorial of affliction as we find presented in this psalm. The wrath and arrows of the Almighty—a body racked with disease and pain—an agonized spirit, the desertion of friends—the plottings and assaults of inveterate enemies—all concentrate upon one sufferer. And who is he that can sustain the assault? Surely this can be none but the 'Man of Sorrows,' whom 'it pleased the Lord to bruise,' C.

Ver. 12. Lay snares. This was fulfilled when the Pharisees and Herodians combined to entangle him in his speech, Mat. 22: 15-22; and when, as in Jn. 8: 6, they thought to ensnare him into a decision in favour of immortality, or into pronouncing a sentence of death, which they might construct into usurpation of the executive power. See also Lu. 6: 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How tremendous is even God's fatherly wrath! But how much more his awful judgment against the ungodly! Sin makes fearful work even in saints. But much more terrible is its effects in sinners! Yea, where real grace is, sin will be more painful and bitter than all the arrows, strokes, and wounds of trouble. And however painful the wounds and groans of the soul are, they are symptoms of life. It is hopeful when outward distempers make men to search out and bewail their sinful causes. But nothing is a more fatal sign than insensibility. No human strength can withstand God's afflicting hand. No sinews of brass, nor bones of iron, can resist the strokes of fierce disease. And often our worldly friends, who flutter around us in our prosperity, treacherously forsake us in our adversity. But what a comfort it is that we have a compassionate God to trust to, who knows and can cure our maladies! How many, how malicious and active, are the enemies of Christ and his saints! Their enmity at God himself and his image is the cause of their quarrel. So fixed is their hatred at godliness, that they abhor it though benefited by it. It is hard, but wise, to imitate Jesus Christ in calm composure under severe provocation;—in silently suffering and in overlooking manifold unkindness done to us. But to take notice of malicious and clamorous enemies is ordinarily to make evil worse. Hope in God will sufficiently support us against every oppression and injury. They who contentedly leave their cause with him shall never be disappointed nor want an advocate to plead for them; and the more sense we have of our offences against him, the greater will be our penitential grief and our patience under the provocation of men. Our blessed relation to him as our Friend, Saviour, and God, improved by the prayer of faith, will quickly bring him to our relief.

PSALM XXXIX. Ver. 1. I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue. He who could, without vain self-confidence, make and keep this resolution, must be more than man. Man might pray to be so upheld, Christ alone could so resolve. C.

Ver. 4. This is a lesson the worldly mind is most unwilling to learn, partly through fear of death, and partly through fear of losing life's vain enjoyments. Our Lord learned it in answer to prayer, leaving us here also 'an example that we should follow his steps.' C.

Ver. 12. Jesus wept at the tomb of Lazarus; over impenitent Jerusalem; and in the days of his flesh 'made supplication with strong crying and tears' of these, because they must often have been by night and in secret, the Spirit, that searcheth the deep things both of God and man, here and elsewhere in the Psalms, makes discovery and gives the record. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great watchfulness and circumspection are necessary to our walking aright in this wicked and ensnaring world. For careless hearts will make crooked ways; and next to the heart nothing is harder to guide than the tongue: but the stronger the temptation is, the stronger ought to be our resolution against it. We are very apt to run from one extreme to another. If we restrain our lips from evil, we are ready to neglect that speech which is with grace seasoned with salt. And when our mind, long in silence, ruminates upon sorrows and the instrumental causes of them, it galls its sores and aggravates its discontent. But there is great need to consider what death is, and how near it is; and that it is continually working in us: for vain and transient are men, with all their joys and honours, their griefs and fears, their toils and cares. And the more we see death and vanity stamped upon all things here, the more we ought to be weaned from them in our affections, and the more solicitous should we be in securing the ever-living, the substantial, and eternal Good. The more our lying refuges are swept away, the more reason we have to trust in and call on God, who never disappoints any. With holy resignation to his strokes, we must earnestly beg the forgiveness of the cause and the removal of the rod. We cannot impeach the equity of his judgments, nor withstand their force. But if they set us a weeping and praying, and render us weaned from this world, God, our friend and companion, will quickly give us relief. And by his grace he will ripen us for heaven before he give the mortal stroke.

PSALM XL. Ver. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord. It is here to be remarked, as in several other psalms, that the speaker is one; and that the Holy Spirit, speaking by Paul, He. 10: 5-9, declares this one to be Christ. But when Christ is found to be the speaker in one part, he must, if there be any confidence in the grammar of any language, be the speaker in the whole psalm. C.

Ver. 6. Mine ears hast thou opened. From Ex. 21: 6 it will appear that this expression signifies 'thou hast made me a servant for ever,' an expression perfectly equivalent to that wondrous mystery revealed 1 Co. 15: 28. Paul, He. 10: 5, quotes from the Septuagint translation, which gives an expository not a literal translation. C.

Ver. 12. Mine iniquities, &c. Instead of labouring to evade the inevitable conclusion that these words were, in the Spirit, spoken by Christ—an attempt made by supposing the psalm should end at ver. 10, or by inserting afflictions instead of iniquities—the peace of the believer rests in the very fact that Christ, by sacrifice, and in virtue of his union of headship, made the believers' sins his own, and felt them, and confessed them, and died for them. See notes on Ps. 32: 5; 25: 2. C.

Ver. 15. See notes on Ps. 5: 10; 35: 8. Several high authorities endeavour to elude the apparent objection that lies against such prayers by translating them prophetically and not as imprecatory. The Greek translation, however, employed by the Spirit of truth, Ac. 1: 20, sets the point at rest in favour of the authorized version. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! what fearful and lasting troubles of body and mind Jesus and his people have allotted them on earth! What patience is necessary under them! But God is their deliverer. And greatly exalting, establishing, joyous, and encouraging is their deliverance at last. Happy are those who, renouncing all other confidences, trust in God alone. Great is the number, the marvellous grace of his thoughts and acts towards Jesus Christ and his children in the work of redemption. But how insignificant were Jewish sacrifices in respect of holy obedience: and infinitely more mouth with a bridle,¹ while the wicked is before me.²

2 I^a was dumb with silence;³ I held my peace, even from good; and my sorrow was stirred.⁴

3 My^a heart was hot within me; while I was musing⁵ the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue.

4 LORD,^a make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am.⁶

5 Behold,^a thou hast made my days as an hand-breadth, and mine age is as nothing before thee: verily every man at his best state⁷ is altogether vanity. Selah.⁸

6 Surely every man walketh in a vain show:⁹ surely they are disquieted in vain: he heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them.

7 And now, LORD, what wait I for? my hope is in thee.

8 Deliver^a me from all my transgressions:¹ make^a me not the reproach of the foolish.

9 I^a was dumb, I opened not my mouth; because thou didst it.

10 Remove^a thy stroke away from me: I am consumed by the blow² of thine hand.

11 When^a thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity,³ thou makest his beauty to consume^a away⁴ like a moth: surely every man is vanity. Selah.

12 Hear^a my prayer, O LORD, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears: for^a I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were.

13 O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more.

PSALM XL.

1 The benefit of confidence in God. 6 Obedience is the best sacrifice. 11 He prayeth for salvation to himself, and confusion to his enemies.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

I WAITED^a patiently¹ for the LORD; and he^b inclined unto me, and heard my cry.

2 He brought me up also out of an horrible pit,² out of the miry clay, and^a set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings.

3 And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God: many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the LORD.

so in comparison of Jesus the Son of God, and his complete holiness of nature, obedience of life, and remedial sufferings! With great cheerfulness he sought for us the blessed rewards of peace. And with a steady purpose of love he fulfilled his work, in executing every saving office for our good. Dreadful was the load of our iniquities laid upon him. But he finished transgression, and made an end of sin, and publishes to men the declarations and offers of gospel-grace. Let us then embrace every promise as ratified by his blood: and in the faith of his suffering death for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, let us cheerfully and gratefully devote ourselves, by the most solemn ties, to his service. In his name let us fight the good fight of faith and finish our course. Behold how the prayers of saints, but chiefly the intercession of Jesus Christ, issued in the downfall of evil and the prosperity and deliverance of believers. It is infinitely dangerous to mock gracious mercy. But no griefs, no poverty, can render them miserable who have the boldest access. Their God, and all that he hath or doth, is the ground of their joy. His inexhaustible fullness, adapted to their wants, the prayers of faith can unlock. The promises are sure; and the moment of fulfilment hastens forward.

PSALM XLI. Ver. 1. 'This psalm, like Ps. xxxviii., which it so much resembles, is one that will be always eminently useful to those who are visited with sickness, and who, at the same time, are deprived of the sympathy in their sufferings which the afflicted so much need and desire, and who, instead of sympathy, are subjected to detraction and calumny—their enemies taking advantage of their condition to circulate unfavourable reports in regard to them, and their heretofore professed friends withdrawing from them and uniting with their calumniators and detractors.'

From man's cruelty the psalmist teaches us to turn to divine mercy. As a friend and helper God never fails. P.

Ver. 4. Our Lord (Jn. 13. 18, compare with ver. 9) declares this scripture fulfilled by the treachery of Judas; our Lord is therefore the speaker. To set aside this evidence, he is said to have quoted by accommodation, a principle totally unsupported by divine authority, a principle which, if once adopted, puts an end to interpretation; for no man could determine where accommodation ends and reality begins. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whilst here also we behold Jesus Christ through poverty, affliction, malicious and treacherous enemies, entering into his glory, to the endless honour of his Father, and the joy of his heart, let us observe, that kindness to God's poor and afflicted is as much our interest as our duty, and God's blessing is the only comfort of every estate. It can give rest in trouble, and make even grief to smile. And pleasant under trouble are penitent confessions and fervent requests founded on the promise and mercy of God. Sin

GENERAL VIEW OF THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE—WHERE CHRIST PRAYED THE LAST PRAYER. [Psalms, xl:7, 8.]—"Then said I, Lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O, my God; yea, the law is within my heart." Alphonse de Lamartine, member of the French Academy, after losing in Palestine his only daughter, Julia, wrote in the Garden of Gethsemane one of the saddest poems, part of which we quote:
 "At the dry, dusty base of Olive's Mount
 Under the shade of Zion's ruined walls,
 Lies a dark valley whence the sun's clear light

Is quite shut out. There Cedron slowly rolls
 His scanty waves between his arid banks;
 There in the hillside lies Jehoshaphat entombed.
 Instead of grass the barren soil bears only ruins,
 And the ancient trees cleave with their straggling roots the stony tombs.
 There between two high rocks is dimly seen
 The lonely grot to which the Man of Grief Went to experience death before it came."

PSALM XLI.

1 The recompense of the charitable man. 4 David prayeth for mercy, complaining of the treachery of his enemies and apostate friends: 11 He acknowledgeth God's favour, and blesseth him.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

BLESSED is he that considereth the 'poor: the LORD will deliver him in time of trouble.⁴

2 The LORD will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

3 The LORD will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness.

4 I said, LORD, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee.

5 Mine enemies speak evil of me, When shall he die, and his name perish?

6 And if he come to see me, he speaketh vanity: his heart gathereth iniquity to itself; when he goeth abroad, he telleth it.

7 All that hate me whisper together against me: against me do they devise my hurt.⁷

8 An evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him: and now that he lieth, he shall rise up no more.

9 Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me.

10 But thou, O LORD, be merciful unto me, and raise me up, that I may requite them.

11 By this I know that thou favourest me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me.

12 And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and settest me before thy face for ever.

13 Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting, and to everlasting. Amen, and Amen.

PSALM XLII.

1 David's zeal to serve God in the temple. 5 He encourageth his dejected soul to trust in God.

To the chief musician, Maschil, for the sons of Korah.

AS the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.³

2 My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?

3 My tears have been my meat day and fills men's hearts and tongues with enmity against Christ and his people: yet vile are their efforts and as vain their hopes. But happy trials are those which excite our prayers, animate our faith, increase our dependence on God, and tune our hearts to his praise; and which make JEHOVAH'S love to our souls more evident and precious.

PSALM XLII. Ver. 6. The general idea is—'Wherever, to whatever region I am led or driven in this providence, I will remember and praise thee.' The psalmist was probably in exile when the psalm was penned. If David wrote it, as is probable, then the general scope would seem to indicate that he had sought a refuge from his enemies somewhere in the northern valley of the Jordan. We know he fled thither on the rebellion of Absalom, and this psalm may refer to that period. P.—Jordan. The word signifies 'the river of judgment.' There John baptized, Mat. 3: 6; there was our Lord himself baptized, ver. 13; and there did the Spirit descend upon him visibly, ver. 16; and there night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?

4 When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude; I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy-day.

5 Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance.

6 O my God, my soul is cast down within me: therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar.

7 Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water-spouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

8 Yet the LORD will command his loving-kindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.

9 I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

10 As with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me; while they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?

11 Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

PSALM XLIII.

1 The psalmist, praying to be restored to the temple, promiseth to serve God joyfully. 5 He encourageth his soul to trust in God.

JUDGE me, O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly nation: O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man.

2 For thou art the God of my strength: why dost thou cast me off? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

3 O send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

4 Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy: yea, upon the harp will I praise thee, O God, my God.

5 Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and did the Father from heaven acknowledge him for his beloved, that is, the true David his son, ver. 17. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing but God himself can satisfy believing souls. If the sense of his love be withdrawn, every enjoyment is tasteless. No cisterns of earthly comforts can quench their thirst, their earnest desire for the LIVING FOUNTAIN. Constrained absence from the public means of fellowship with God is a heavy and tormenting burden to a faithful soul, and quickens his longings after them. No wonder then that he groans earnestly to be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven. O what terrible afflictions and sorrows are in the lot of God's favourite saints! When outward distress lies heavy, inward temptations are often violent. And the joys which we have tasted in God make the withdrawal of his presence and comforts the more grievous. But we often cause our own dejections under trouble, by poring on our corruptions or distress, and forgetting the promises, grace, and faithfulness of our Redeemer. We had need therefore to call our souls to account for their conduct. And if we cannot get relief by pleading with our burdened spirits, we should commit our case to our gracious God. And the more furious and manifold the storms of trouble are, the more earnest ought to be our believing applications to and dependence on God. Let providence cast us where it will, our God and our prayers should still attend us. Our faith may be enfeebled and sore shaken, but should never fail. Remembrance of what God is to us, and hath done for us, should suppress our unbelieving fears. If by faith we accept salvation, neither earth nor hell can hinder us from the benefit of it. In our darkest nights of trouble, desertion, and temptation, we have always why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

PSALM XLV.

1 The majesty and grace of Christ's kingdom. 10 The duty of the church, and the benefits thereof.

To the chief musician upon ^aShoshannim, for the sons of Korah, Maschil.¹ A song of loves.

MY heart is ²inditing³ a 'good matter: I speak of the things which I have made touching the King; my tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

much mercy to thank God for. Whatever repeated encouragement our feeble minds may need, if God be our God, our life, and the health of our countenance, neither earth, nor death, nor hell is able to hurt us.

PSALM XLIII. Ver. 1. The meaning is, not that the writer desired the Lord to try and judge him as a culprit; but rather to interfere in his behalf—to save him from the unjust accusations of the wicked. The psalmist was conscious that he was guiltless in regard to the charges brought against him, and therefore he made his appeal from unjust men to a just and righteous God. He does not represent himself as absolutely pure, or perfectly holy before God; but simply as innocent of the crimes laid against him by men. P.

Ver. 2. Why dost thou cast me off? This expostulation was exemplified in the crucifixion, Mat. 27. 46, when our Lord cried with a loud voice, as if it were a special thing that all should hear, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' C.

REFLECTIONS.—When men wrong us and God derests us, our only refuge is still in God himself. He may frown, but he cannot cease to love his people, however hard they find it to believe so amidst deep convictions and raging lusts. It may be for a time difficult to reconcile God's providences with his promises; but with a little patience the mystery will be unveiled. Such as love Christ's appearance shall have their cause judged far sooner than their enemies wish, and far better than themselves conceive. Next to God himself, the saints love nothing more dearly than the ordinances of his grace. But none can approach ordinances aright unless they exercise faith in their hearts; and it is for his sake the saints delight to be there.

Men never attend ordinances aright but when they have fellowship with Christ as their altar, their atonement, their food, their God, their joy. Intimate fellowship with God cannot but tune our hearts and tongues to his praise. And the more we deal with God by faith, we shall see the more sin and evil in inward despondency.

PSALM XLIV. Ver. 1. The grammar here presents a plurality of speakers, and their statements and complaints indicate a faithful but a persecuted church, ver. 11, 17-22. Occasionally (ver. 4, 6, 15) a single speaker interposes, who, it appears from ver. 15, can be no other than Christ; for no man who knows the versatility of frail human nature can imagine any but Christ truly to utter that verse. C.

Ver. 3. Infidels have frequently objected against JEHOVAH for expelling the nations of Canaan. There are two answers—1. God has a sovereign right over his own world. 2. The Canaanites were righteously expelled on account of their wickedness, Le. 19. 23, 24. C.

Ver. 9. The true followers of Jesus are all soldiers of the cross, and must follow the Lamb, and like him be often put to shame, and like him despise it for the joy set before them, 1 Ti. 6. 12; 2 Ti. 2. 3, 4; 4. 7; He. 12. 2. C.

Ver. 12. This has often in times of persecution been literally fulfilled, when the mere sentence of the judge, deciding that the accused, under some opprobrious name, was a true Christian, was sufficient to deliver him over as a slave to the galleys, or transport him to distant penal colonies. C.

Ver. 15. This is true only of the Son of God, and there is an awful sense in which it is ever true, seeing there are those in the professing church who ever 'crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.' He. 6. 6. C.

Ver. 19. The place of dragons. The persecution of the church the Spirit of God attributes to the malice of Satan under the emblem of a dragon, Re. 12. 3-9; and the scenes of persecution may well be termed the 'place of dragons,' where his servants rule, Ep. 6. 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Memorials of past mercies ought to be carefully recorded and transmitted from age to age, as an encouragement in time of need as well as a ground of thankfulness. It is never outward force, but Jesus Christ's Word and Spirit, that build up the church and triumph over the powers of darkness. If we want help in trouble, we must renounce all our confidences, and take God alone to be our kind deliverer and boast; so shall our troubles and griefs be quickly turned into everlasting praise.—It is common, but sinful, for them whom God casts down to think themselves utterly cast off, and to shrink under reproach and suffering, as if they were not our appointed cross. For it is not now but hereafter that God will make us to know and admire the mystery of his providence. It is especially distressing to the faithful when they falsely apprehend that God gets no glory by the afflictions of his people; nay, instead thereof, is dishonoured and reproached.—All God's people, though not called to be proper martyrs, have their particular sufferings allotted to them for his sake. But it is dangerous to comply with sins in order to shun troubles. Highly provoking to God are treachery, apostasy, and idolatry; and fearfully he will search out and punish them. But great is the mercy that nothing can break his promise of grace with the faithful; and that not sins of mere infirmity, but indulged provocations, are held as a violation of their round of duties. And if he appear PSALM XLV. Ver. 1. It was the general opinion of the ancient Jewish rabbins and commentators that this beautiful psalm had direct if not exclusive reference to the Messiah. Its general scope, and some of its more remarkable expressions, prove this. There are passages in it such as cannot, by any fair canon of interpretation, be applied to any man, however pure in character or exalted in rank. Besides Paul, in the epistle to the Hebrews, distinctly applies it to our Lord, ch. i. 8. 9. When thus interpreted it is clear, consistent, and noble. ^P—The King. This King is Messiah, 'God manifest in the flesh,' exalted to glory; and the words given by the Spirit to the prophet are the words of the Father to his beloved Son. See He. i. 1, 5, 6, 8-13. C.

Ver. 9. The queen, not the church universal as 'the bride, the Lamb's wife,' for then could that queen have no 'companions,' Re. 21:9. Is not this queen rather the primitive Christian church, gathered to the Son of God, Ja. 1:18; Re. 14:4, and of which all subsequent ages produce but descendants or companions? C.

Ver. 12. Tyre is particularized as the emblem of all mercantile nations.—Note. In the merciful and overruling providence of God the mercantile has been made the great agent of the missionary enterprise; and the desire of acquiring the wealth of this world has led to the diffusion of the unsearchable riches of Christ. C.

Ver. 16. These words apply not to the bride but to the Bridegroom—the Messiah. The first clause signifies that great though his glory might be as the descendant (after the flesh) of a long line of kings, it would be far surpassed by the glory of his posterity—his spiritual seed. Their name would be more illustrious, their acts would be more noble, and their dominion would be wider and more enduring. How true is this of King Jesus! ^P—Fathers. Instead of prophets and apostles, whom I will successively remove from thy head (see 2 Ki. 2:3; Ro. 9:5; 1 Co. 4:15; Re. 21:14), shall be thine own spiritual children, converted to God by means of thy faithful testimony. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Discoveries of Jesus' glory powerfully animate our hearts and tune our tongues to commend him. How glorious is his person as God-man! Rich in grace are the qualities of his heart and words of his mouth. In him it pleased the Father

PSALM XLVI.

1 The confidence of the church in God's protection. 8 An exhortation to contemplate his works.

To the chief musician for the sons of Korah, ^aA song upon ^bAlamoth.

GOD is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble:

2 Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea;^c

3 Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah.^d

4 There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most High.

5 God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, and that right early.^e that all fullness of blessings for men should dwell. In almighty power, by his word and influences of his Spirit, he persuaded multitudes in the apostolic age to the obedience of faith: and by the strokes of his justice did and shall destroy his Jewish or other implacable opposers. Having by himself purged our sins, he, as our righteous Saviour, sat down at the right hand of God, as the reward of his righteous service; and is, in the most transcendent manner, filled with the Holy Ghost to shed on us abundantly. In a most glorious and heart-engaging manner his manhood, mediatorial offices, and righteousness appear in the heavens above and in his church and ordinances below. And his people, adorned with gifts and graces, are raised up together, and made to sit together with him. Faithful men, both Jews and Gentiles, in the day of his power, are persuaded to accept the gospel, to renounce all others, and devote themselves entirely to him and his service, as the objects of his gracious and everlasting delight. In shining robes of righteousness, grace, and holy conversation, each in their order are adorned; and after serving their generation by the will of God, they shall be brought and admitted into his heavenly palace with exceeding joy. Instead of Jewish fathers shall there be Gentile converts; and instead of glorified saints shall there be another generation, begotten by the power of his grace, all made kings and priests unto God! Thus by the spread and influence of the gospel shall Jesus' renown and honour be perpetuated on earth, while those in heaven above shall praise him for ever and ever.

6 The heathen raged; the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice; the earth melted.

PSALM XLVI. Ver. 1. This has been called Luther's psalm. 'It was that he was accustomed to sing in trouble. When the times were dark—when the enemies of truth appeared to triumph—when disaster seemed to come over the cause in which he was engaged, and the friends of the Reformation were dispirited and sad—he was accustomed to say to his fellow-labourers, Come, let us sing the 46th psalm.' No other passage in the whole Word of God is more adapted for rousing the drooping faith of the church. The thoughts are noble and the words sublime. God omnipotent—God ever present—God infinite in mercy—God the king, defender, and sustainer of his church, is the grand theme of the psalmist. ^P—God is our refuge. The assembled church here exemplifies the fulfilment of the gracious promise of the foregoing psalm, ver. 17, the highest praise being that which is due for deliverance from trouble and strength for duty. C.

Ver. 4. 'The holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High is a stream, the branches whereof gladden the city of God' (Mudge). The stream is the truth in Jesus; the branches, reading, hearing, holy converse, prayer, exhortation, reproof, correction, instruction in righteousness, furnishing the man of God to all good works. C.

REFLECTIONS.—When dangers appear greatest our faith in God's promise and perfections should be strongest. If we can triumph in God as our own God we may triumph over every trouble and danger. The revolutions on earth can little affect them whose hearts are duly fixed on things above. They need never fear, and they can never fail, who take God for their refuge and their strength. Notwithstanding all her enemies, his church shall in him obtain joy, establishment, and deliverance. If by his word, his Spirit, and his blood, we enjoy communications of grace and comfort, we are amply repaid for all the storms that can be raised by the world that lieth in wickedness. But in what a tremendous and awful manner he from age to age revenges the injuries done to his church, the ruin of the nations around Canaan, and of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Antichristians, Mahometans, and others, have or shall manifest. And it is highly proper to contemplate his infinite perfections, displayed in all his conquests of judgment or grace; that in every age, in every case, we may have faith in him as our Protector, Deliverer, and Strength.

PSALM XLVII. Ver. 1. This noble song of praise and joy was probably composed at the dedication of the temple and was ARENA OF AMPHITHEATRE, PUTEOLI—NEAR WHERE ST. PAUL LANDED IN ITALY. [PSALMS, xlvii:8.]—"God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness." We learn from history that wicked men are no less under law than righteous men. The laws of God which wicked men violate destroy them, while the righteous are preserved by observing them. This arena of the amphitheater at Puteoli is a very good illustration of the wreck and ruin which have come to the fame and the fortunes of the men who built it, and found, as Nero did, upon its arena, a scene for wild and unbridled actions. Puteoli is rich in historic associations. Scipio sailed from this place to Spain. Cicero had a villa here, and here Nero planned the murder of his mother. This was the famous watering place of the rich and luxurious Romans

PSALM XLVIII.

The ornaments and privileges of the church.

A song and psalm for¹ the sons of Korah.

GREAT is the LORD, and greatly to be praised in the ²city² of our God, in the mountain³ of his holiness.

2 Beautiful^a for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the ⁴sides of the north,⁴ the city of the ⁹great King.

3 God^a is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For^a lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled; they were troubled, and hasted away.

6 Fear^a took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

7 Thou^a breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind.

8 As^a we have heard, so have we seen in ^{the}city of the LORD of hosts, in the city of our ^{God}: God will establish it for ever. Selah.

9 We^a have thought of thy loving-kindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple.

10 According^a to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: ^{thy} right hand is full of righteousness.

11 Let mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad, ^{because} of thy judgments.

12 Walk^a about Zion, and go round about her: ^{tell} the towers thereof.

13 Mark ye well her ^{bulwarks}, ^{consider} her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following.

14 For^a this God is our God for ever and ever; he will be our guide even unto death.

6 Or, raise up.

intended to be sung during the solemn service. It is in every way adapted for such an event. P.—O clap your hands. There are feelings and sentiments which words cannot express, and then the aid of action is commanded, and specially the hands as the organs and emblems of all activity. —C.

Ver. 3. He shall subdue, &c. Not by any earthly, but by a spiritual conquest; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty (nevertheless) to the pulling down of strongholds, 2 Co. 10. 4. C.

Ver. 5. This psalm when written was a prophecy, but is now a record of the ascension of Christ, Ep. 4. 8. and of that joy with which the heavenly powers hailed his triumph over sin and death. C.

Ver. 9. The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham. This verse carries us beyond the ascension, to a period when Jew and Gentile shall be 'both one in Christ'—not merely in principle, as they are now, but in fact, according to the sure word of prophecy. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, my soul, our exalted Lord Jesus, terrible to his enemies because of their rejection of him; but kind to believers in blessing them throughout all the world in himself—in choosing for them, when having faith, their portion in the new-covenant and in the heavenly state! Behold how, amidst surrounding troops of hymning angels, he ascended on high; had all power in heaven and earth given him; and by his gospel, word, and gracious influence, he gathers the nations to himself, that they may be blessed together with faithful Abraham; and even makes the rulers of nations submit to his yoke or helpful to his cause!

PSALM XLVIII. Ver. 6. That these words are not a historic reference or narrative, but a historic prophecy, will be evident from considering that they introduce to faith the perpetual establishment of Zion, ver. 8, whereas it yet presents to sense nothing but the feature of 'perpetual desolations.' C.

Ver. 8. In the city of our God: God will establish it for ever. How can this be reconciled with the destruction of all things foretold, 2 Pe. 3. 7? Most easily: God will establish Zion for ever in the person of her King, in the happiness of her subjects, in the fulfilment of her prophecies, the realization of her types, the demonstration of her faith, the beauty of her holiness, and the brightness of her glory. C.

Ver. 11. The daughters of Judah. Not the inferior cities, but literally, the daughters of Judah: as Miriam and her attendants rejoiced at passing the Red Sea, Ex. 15. 20, 21; or the women out of all the cities of Israel, to hail and celebrate the victory of David over Goliath, 1 Sa. 18. 6, 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great, and greatly to be praised, is our exalted Redeemer. Glorious is his gospel-church in which his presence dwells. And in a marvellous manner hath he, in instances unnumbered, been known for her refuge. When ravaging invaders and furious persecutors have concurred in attempts to destroy her, their plots and fury have often issued in their own ruin, and his people's triumph and praise of his kindness. Quickly shall her remaining enemies be undone; and no gates of hell have, or ever shall, prevail against her. Her bulwarks, palaces of ordinances, and officers, are built on Jesus the Rock of ages, and are protected by his arm of omnipotence. Let us then declare his wondrous works and our relation to him to posterity, as an honour to him, and an encouragement to them to come and cleave to him and triumph in his praise.

PSALM XLIX. Ver. 1. Four things prove the prophetic speaker to be Christ. (1) The confident spirit, and universality of the call, as of one entitled to audience, ver. 1. (2) The theme of wisdom so confidently announced, ver. 2. (3) The direct quotation of ver. 4 by Mat. 13. 35, as fulfilled in the parables of our Lord. (4) The confident trust of the speaker in a glorious resurrection and acceptance with God, ver. 15. C.

Ver. 5. The leading idea of the psalm is embodied in this verse. Confident in the power and mercy of God the writer lays aside all fear. Evil days may come; life may not all be sunshine; but in the darkest days of sorrow and suffering God will save him. The word translated 'heels,' means also the impression of the heel, the footprint. Then it came to mean 'a liar in wait,' or one who watches for an advantage. This is its meaning here; and the sense of the clause therefore is: 'When I am exposed to the craft and cunning of those who lie in wait for me, what have I in reality to fear? God is on my side.' P.—Heels. This word is translated by high authorities supplanters, that is, false Christs, seeking to supplant me in name—of the world supplanting me in the hearts, and of worldly rulers supplanting me in my authority over the kingdoms of this world. But does it not rather signify the iniquity of his followers—of Judas who betrayed him, of the disciples who forsook him, and of the whole host of believers whose accumulated iniquities he bore in his body on the tree? C.

Ver. 10. Wise men die. And if even the wise man cannot rescue himself from temporal death, how can any save himself or his brother from death spiritual and eternal? C.

Ver. 12. That is, when he so far forgets himself as altogether to neglect salvation, or trusts to his own power to avoid death, or his own merit to meet the judgment. C.

Ver. 13. The traditionary or written sayings of men are often called immortal, though their authors be dead; and works the least godly are, alas! often the most popular. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how the hearts of men cleave to earthly enjoyments! The poor need as much to be warned against envy and discontentment as the rich against pride and carnal confidence. And the truths of God ought to be inculcated with the greatest seriousness, both by word and by example. Never ought saints (no, not when they suffer the charges and chastisements of their sins of conversation) to abandon themselves to unbelieving fears and doubts of God's all-sufficiency and love.—The day of death is a trying time with respect to true happiness. And then a sense of God's love, and a prospect of eternal glory, are infinitely more precious than thousands of gold and silver. O the dreadful folly of most men, who seek for, hold delight in, and depend on things of this world as if they were their God, their ALL IN ALL! and yet

ZION GATE—ON MT. ZION, WHERE DAVID LIVED. [Psalms, xlviii:2]— “Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King.” The Zion Gate is called in Arabic, “The Gate of the Prophet David.” It is on the summit of the ridge of Zion between the Armenian convent and the tomb of David. The Zion Gate opens into several footpaths which lead down to the valley of Hinnom. We pass through this gate to go to the tomb of David in the possession of the Mohammedans. A little further north, near the wall, is the Armenian church with the house of Caiaphas, and between the two is the place the monks point out as the spot where the cock crowed and where Peter wept after denying his Master. The Armenian church is almost due southwest of Zion Gate.

PSALM XLIX.

1 The psalmist calleth upon all the earth to join him in his meditations. 5 He sheweth the vanity of trusting in worldly wealth.

To the chief musician, A psalm for the sons of Korah.

HEAR this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world:

2 Both low and high, rich and poor, together.

3 My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding.

4 I will incline mine ear to a parable; I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

5 Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, when the iniquity of my heels shall compass me about?

6 They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches;

7 None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him;

8 (For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever;)

9 That he should still live for ever, and not see corruption.

10 For he seeth that wise men die, likewise the fool and the brutish person perish, and leave their wealth to others.

11 Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling-places to all generations: they call their lands after their own names.

12 Nevertheless man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.

13 This their way is their folly; yet their posterity approve their sayings.

14 Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling.

15 But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave: for he shall receive me.

16 Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his house is increased:

17 For when he dieth he shall carry nothing away; his glory shall not descend after him.

18 Though while he lived he blessed his soul, (and men will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself,)

19 He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light.

20 Man that is in honour, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish.

how unavailable to ransom the soul, perpetuate the life, or preserve from hell! To judge of things aright we must weigh time with eternity. It is neither wealth nor poverty, but Jesus Christ's righteousness and grace, that can render us respected of God, or really happy, in time or eternity. It is redemption through his blood that gives hope in death. It is not their own vaunts, or the world's admiration, but the word of God, that adjusts men's real character. It is not what we have here, but what we can carry into the other world, that constitutes the true riches. They are only wise who consider their latter end. Nay, in death, the state of the most loathsome animal is infinitely preferable to that of the unregenerate sinner.

PSALM L. Ver. 3. A fire. A fire of the Spirit to baptize his children, Mat. 3: 11; a fire of judgment to consume the imperfections of his people, 1 Co. 3: 15, and the strongholds of his enemies, He. 12: 29. C.

Ver. 6. The heavens shall declare his righteousness. The heavens, into which Christ has entered, as a 'Lamb without spot,' will declare by the fact of his admission and appearance, and glory there, the perfect righteousness, in virtue of which he ascended to glory, and sits upon the throne. He. 9: 14, 24; 10: 20, 22.—God is

1 The majesty of God in the church. 5 His command to gather his saints. 7 The pleasure of God is not in ceremonies, 14 but in sincerity of obedience.

A psalm of Asaph.

THE mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken, and called the earth, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

2 Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.

3 Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

5 Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

6 And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself. Selah.

7 Hear, O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee: I am God, even thy God.

8 I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me.

9 I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he-goats out of thy folds:

10 For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.

11 I know all the fowls of the mountains; and the wild beasts of the field are mine.

12 If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

13 Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

14 Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most High:

15 And call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.

16 But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth?

17 Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee.

18 When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers.

19 Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

20 Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son.

21 These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether judge. God is judge now by the books written; he will be judge hereafter by the opening of the books—sitting upon the throne—the assembling of all nations, and the pronouncing of his final decision, Mat. 25: 31. C.

Ver. 8. Some forms of sacrifice, as the show-bread, were continually, that is, without interruption, before God; others at short intervals, as the morning and evening sacrifice; others at longer intervals, as the passover and sacrifices of atonement. But all were mere pictures, of which Christ was the great original—and those pictures are of no value before God, but as they testify to Christ in us, the hope of glory. C.

Ver. 18. This was verified when the high-priest and his friends consented with Judas, who was a thief, Jn. 12: 6, and were partakers in guilt with an adulterous generation, Mar. 18: 38. C.

David prayeth for sanctification.

PSALM LII.

He prophesieth Doeg's destruction.

such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

22 Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

23 Whoso^a offereth praise glorifieth me: and to him^b that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God.

PSALM LI.

1 David prayeth for remission of his sins, whereof he maketh a deep confession. 6 He prayeth for sanctification. 16 God delighteth not in sacrifice, but in sincerity. 18 He prayeth for the church.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David, when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bath-sheba.

HAVE mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.¹

2 Wash^a me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

3 For I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me.

4 Against^a thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest.

5 Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive^a me.

6 Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts; and in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom.

7 Purge^a me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

8 Make^a me to hear joy^a and gladness; that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice.

9 Hide^a thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities.⁵

10 Create^a in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit^a within me.

11 Cast^a me not away from thy presence; and take not thy Holy Spirit from me.

14 Deliver me from blood-guiltiness,^a O God, thou God of my salvation; and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness.

17 The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

18 Do^a good in thy good pleasure unto Zion; build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19 Then^b shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness,⁹ with burnt-offering, and whole burnt-offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar.

PSALM LII.

1 David, reproving the spiteful malice of Doeg, prophesieth his destruction. 6 The righteous shall rejoice at it. 8 David, in confidence of God's mercy, giveth him thanks.

To the chief musician, Maschil, A psalm of David, when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech.

WHY boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man? the goodness of God endureth continually.

2 Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs; like a sharp razor, working deceitfully.

3 Thou lovest evil more than good, and lying rather than to speak righteousness. Selah.

4 Thou lovest all-devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue.²

5 God^a shall likewise destroy thee³ for ever: he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling-place, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.

6 The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him:

7 Lo, this is the man that made not God

Ver. 20. Christ, who 'came unto his own,' was not only 'despised and rejected' by his brethren; but the 'days of his flesh' were spent amidst the 'strife of tongues,' and he sat as a mark for every arrow of slander. C.

Ver. 22. Ye that forget God. Few are so atheistical as to 'forget God,' as he exists in a mere opinion; but how many forget him as the 'living God,' seeing, knowing, and judging all things! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the majesty, extensive the high domain, and terrible the wrath of God! And great is his care of those who have accepted through faith Jesus Christ and have walked in him as they received him. But God hath full power to change the positive institutions of his own worship at his pleasure, and to reject his long professed people for their contempt of his Son. No obedience is acceptable to him but what proceeds from the faith of his being our own God in Christ. To obey was always better than sacrifice; and prayer to and praise of God more than burnt-offerings. And since Jesus' death, and Jerusalem's destruction, Jewish ceremonies are not only vain but hurtful. But never is our gracious God more ready to hear our supplications than in a day of trouble; and what grateful vows and thanksgivings doth he then deserve at our hands! Notwithstanding antecedent gospel declarations, how rarely doth the Son of man, when he cometh, either in remarkable mercy or judgment, find faith in the earth, or indeed aught but empty formalities and gross wickedness. And none are worse than profane clergymen, stained with hypocrisy, covetousness, whoredom, slander of Christ and his saints, blasphemy of God, and everything horrid. But graciously he warns ere he strikes. And to bow before the sceptre of his grace, receive his gospel offers, and practise holiness in his fear, is the way to escape the rod of his judgments and to share his eternal favours.

PSALM LI. Ver. 1. According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. The Hebrew title attributes this psalm to David penitentially bowing to the rebuke of Nathan, 2 Sa. xi. 2. c. c. Horsley, however, justly observes that this title cannot be correct, as ver. 4 describes the sin of the speaker as solely against God, whereas that of David was also against both Uriah and Bath-sheba. When then is the speaker? The answer lies (1) in comparing Ps. 40.6 with He. 10.6, and these with Ps. 51.16. (2) From considering that, though Christ's oppression of the 'iniquities laid upon him,' and that just sense that none but Christ could truly utter the perpetual vow of sin people which he bore, the deficiency of which he ever saw, and Ver. 5. The iniquity and sin belonged, by ordinary descent, to the mother; but the 'body prepared for Christ by the power of the Holy Ghost, Mat. 1. 20, was itself holy, and his spirit filled with truth and wisdom, and his life with righteousness, He. 7. 2, 6. C.

Ver. 7. Hyssop was employed in sprinkling the blood of the sacrifice in the ceremonial cleansing of the leper, Le. 14. 4-6. Christ, by his own blood, 1 Jn. 1. 7, cleansed away our sins, which he 'bore in his own body on the tree,' 1 Pe. 2. 24. C.

Ver. 13. Though Christ was always a teacher of righteousness, it was not until the 'joy of salvation,' ver. 12, had been restored after his resurrection from the dead, that his full qualifications as a Saviour were developed in the conversion of sinners. See Ac. 2. 41. C.

Ver. 14. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness. Not from the sin of murder committed, but from any guilt that would arise from neglecting to 'declare all the counsel of God' to sinners. See Ac. 18. 6; 20. 26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Into what grievous iniquities the best of men, if left to themselves, quickly fall!—but never into any from which their gracious God may not recover them. Such is sin publicly ought to take to themselves public shame, for the honour of their God and for a warning to others. Sin is a heavy burden to a penitent soul. It forces from his heart importunate cries for pardoning and purging mercy. And nothing less than promises of mercy can encourage him to pray in faith: and nothing less than merciful pardons and cleansings through Jesus' blood can save him from hell. God's blotting out of sin fixes a penitential remembrance of it, and repeated grief on account of it in the heart of a saint. And a heart truly broken for sin never seeks exultation, but desires to take all shame and confusion. The exceeding sinfulness of sin his strength; but ¹trusted in the abundance of his riches, and ²strengthened himself in his wickedness.⁵

8 But I ^{am} like a green olive-tree in the house of God:⁷ I ^{trust} in the mercy of God for ever and ever.

9 I ^{will} praise thee for ever, because thou hast done ^{it}:⁸ and ^I will wait on thy name; for ^{it} is good before thy saints.

PSALM LIII.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their own conscience. 6 He wisheth to see the salvation of God.

To the chief musician upon Mahalath, Maschil, A psalm of David.

THE 'fool' hath said in his heart, There is no God. ¹Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: there is none that doeth good.

2 God^e looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek God.

3 Every^d one of them is gone back; they are altogether become filthy: there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 Have the workers of iniquity 'no knowledge? who ^{eat} up my people as they eat bread: they have not called upon God.

5 There were they in great fear,³ where no fear was; for God hath ^{scattered} the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame, ^{because} God hath despised them.

6 Oh that the salvation⁴ of Israel were come out of Zion! When ^{God} bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

lies in its opposition to God's nature and law. And true penitents justify God in all his judgments, however heavy upon them. No person was ever really humbled for sin till brought to see the inward and natural corruption of his heart. It is not outward forms, but inward reality of grace, that God primarily requires; and it is he alone that offers it to us. He alone must forgive our sins, purging our conscience by the blood of his Son. He alone must sanctify and renew our hearts, pour out his Spirit, restore our joys, and grant us his comfortable presence. What anguish and breaking of soul, loads of guilt, and of sorrow for it, can produce! But God who gives the pardon must also give the comfort of it. Renewed souls count the service of God the most perfect freedom: and the experience of God's remarkable kindness really animates to zeal for his glory, the instruction of others, and the welfare of his church. Broken-hearted penitents, viewing themselves as Achans in the camp, are the most earnest wrestlers with God for the happiness of the church. And all the returns of service and praise to God therein must be founded on his special favours, received or secured in Christ and his blood.

PSALM LII. Ver. 1. The occasion on which this psalm was written is stated in this title; and the affecting narrative may be seen in 1 Sa. xxi. The psalm is divided into three parts. In the first (ver. 1-4), the character of the writer's enemy and calumniator is briefly but graphically depicted. In the second (ver. 5-7), the terrible punishment in store for him is described. In the third, the psalmist shows his own security and trust in God. P. Mighty man. An appeal to man, who, when exalted to power, is so often perverted by pride, that 'the insolence of office' has become a proverb. O ye mighty, humble yourselves before God, and remember ye are but dust! C.

Ver. 5. God successively roots out the wicked: and the destruction of the 'great city Babylon,' Re. 18. 21, will complete the work of extirpation. C.

Ver. 9. Thou hast done it—appointed me to this unchanging office and glory of Prophet, Priest, and King—a Saviour, He. 6. 20; 7. 16; 24. 28. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Hardened indeed is the sinner who abuses the goodness of God to glory in his wickedness. Malice, lying, and craft are the abhorrence of God and the image of the devil; and quickly shall they render men miserable in life and lost in hell. Quickly shall those who trust in wealth or wickedness remove into everlasting woe. And the striking judgments of God on the wicked ought to be carefully observed and improved as warnings, while we thank him for sending us his Son so that he is the means of our deliverance. God marvellously founds the prosperity and promised honours of his people on their active faith. And what he has promised we must patiently wait for. None that trust in his mercy shall be disappointed, but ever flourish in grace and triumph in praise.

PSALM LIII. Ver. 4. My people was the specific title given to Israel in Egypt, Ex. 3. 7; 5. 1, and he who so names them here can be no other than Christ, 'the Lord that bought them,' the Angel of the covenant 'who redeemed them,' C.

Ver. 5. There—that is, where the enemy had cruelly attempted to devour God's people.—Who were in 'great fear!' The people of God; and while they trembled, 'no fear was,' for God immediately 'scattered the bones' of all their assailants. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a fountain of atheism is in our hearts! What folly—what filth—what evil—is in every sin? and yet what unnumbered acts and fearful fruits of it everywhere abound in the world! But fear and shame shall at last overwhelm the sinners, particularly those who ate up, persecuted, and oppressed the people of God. Even the marvellous salvation of men through Christ shall contribute to the everlasting undoing of obstinate sinners. We are taught in the Scriptures that Christ is a Saviour of life or a Saviour of death.

PSALM LIV.

1 David, complaining of the Ziphims, prayeth for salvation. 4 Upon his confidence in God's help, he promiseth sacrifice and praise.

To the chief musician on ²Neginoth, Maschil, A psalm of David, when the Ziphims came and said to Saul, Doth not David hide himself with us?

SAVE me, O God, by ^{thy} name, and judge me ^{by} thy strength.

2 Hear^d my prayer, O God; give ear to the words of my mouth.

3 For ^{strangers} are risen up against me, and oppressors seek after my soul: they have not set God before them. Selah.

4 Behold, ^{God} is mine helper: the LORD is with them that uphold my soul.

5 He ^{shall} reward evil unto mine ^{enemies}: cut them off in thy truth.³

6 I ^{will} freely sacrifice unto thee; I will praise thy name, O LORD, for it is good.

7 For he ^{hath} delivered me out of all trouble; and mine eye hath seen his desire upon mine enemies.

PSALM LV.

1 David in his prayer complaineth of his fearful case. 9 He prayeth against his enemies, of whose wickedness and treachery he complaineth. 16 He comforteth himself in God's preservation of him, and confusion of his enemies.

To the chief musician on ²Neginoth, Maschil, A psalm of David.

GIVE ear^b to my prayer, O God; and hide not thyself from my supplication.

2 Attend unto me, and hear me: ^I mourn in my complaint, and make a noise;

3 Because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked: for ^{they} cast iniquity upon me, and in wrath they hate me.

4 My^e heart is sore pained within me; and the terrors of death are fallen upon me.

mercy, he that utters this petition can be no other than 'the holy One of God,' prophetically described in the days of his flesh. C.
Ver. 5. 'In thy truth,' i.e. in thy regard for what is just and right. Inflict upon them the punishment which their crimes deserve. There is no sinful enmity or hatred here; there are no vindictive feelings on the part of the psalmist. Justice is what he demands; and he demands it on the grounds of public weal and individual safety. P.

Ver. 7. A prophetic vision of that blessed period when 'all trouble shall cease in the body of Christ the church, Ep. 1. 22, and the 'last enemy' shall be destroyed, which is death, 1 Co. 15. 25, 26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The prayer of faith is a sovereign remedy in every distress; and all salvation is of God, who never fails those that seek him. Nearest neighbours and relations are often the saints' bitterest enemies. And when men leave God out of their sight there is no wickedness too great for them. But if he be our helper he will soon raise us up friends and rid us of our enemies, according to his promise. The soul may rejoice that has the security of God's infallible promise. And past experience is the ground of cordial thanksgiving, and the earnest of continual support and future deliverance.

PSALM LV. Ver. 2. The speaker is to be ascertained, 1. By some parallel psalm already expounded by New Testament quotation. 2. By some internal sentiment, necessarily confined to an individual character. For the first point, see Ps. 69. 5; Ac. 1. 20, then compare Ps. 55. 12-15, 20, 21; and as Christ speaks in point directs us to ver. 16-18, 22, where the positive character of the speaker's faith demonstrates that speaker to be Christ; see also ver. 4, 5, where the agony can characterize none but our Lord in Gethsemane, Lu. 22. 44. C.

Ver. 13. Mine equal—in all the natural conditions of humanity—in descent from Abraham—in claim to the promises—in possession of the oracles of God—in access to him through the ordinances of religion—and in all the familiarities of a kind, condescending, and holy intercourse. C.

Ver. 15. Let death seize upon them, &c. This judgment was exemplified in the case of Korah and his company, Nu. 16. 30, 33; and will be still more awfully inflicted in the destructive judgment of the mystical Babylon, Re. 18. 8. C.

5 Fearfulness⁹ and trembling are come upon me, and horror hath overwhelmed me.¹

6 And I said, "Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest."

7 Lo, then would I wander far off, and remain in the wilderness. Selah.²

8 I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest.³

9 "Destroy," O LORD, and divide their tongues: for I have seen violence and strife in the city.

10 Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof; mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

11 Wickedness is in the midst thereof; deceit and guile depart not from her streets.

12 For "it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him:

18 He hath delivered my soul in peace from the battle that was against me: "for there were many with me."²

19 God shall hear, and afflict them, even he that abideth³ of old. Selah. Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God.⁴

20 He hath put forth his hands against such as be at peace with him: he hath broken⁵ his covenant.

PSALM LVI.

1 David, praying to God in confidence of his word, complaineth of his enemies. 9 He professeth his confidence in God's word, and promiset to praise him.

To the chief musician upon Jonath-elem-rechokim, Michtam¹ of David, when the Philistines took him in Gath.

BE merciful^b unto me, O God; for ²man would swallow me up: he fighting daily oppresseth me.

2 Mine enemies³ would daily swallow me up: for they be many that fight against me, O thou most High.⁴

3 What⁹ time I am afraid, I will trust in thee.

4 In^b God I will praise his word: in God I have put my trust;⁵ I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

5 Every day they wrest my words:⁶ all their thoughts are against me for evil.

6 They gather themselves together, they hide themselves, they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul.

7 Shall they escape by iniquity? in thine anger cast down the people, O God.⁷

8 Thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?

9 When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back: this I know; for God is for me.

10 In^c God will I praise his word: in the LORD will I praise his word.

11 In^c God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.

12 Thy vows are upon me, O God: I will render praises unto thee.

13 For thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?

Ver. 22. Casi thy burden. The Father here addresses his beloved Son Jesus, when he bore our griefs and carried our sorrows, and through him he addresses every believer, saying, "Cast your care upon him (the Lord), for he careth for you," 1 Pe. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 23. Turbulent combinations of bloody and deceitful men will not be judicially permitted to live half the days to which, as peaceful individuals, they would naturally have attained. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While here, as in a glass, we behold Jesus, hated, reproached, betrayed, and murdered at Jerusalem, and the judgment of God overtaking his persecutors in the destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation, let us observe that the best of men are ordinarily most exposed to the hatred and reproach of a carnal world: and good men may, in great trials, find their fears strong and their faith shaken; but it is a great mercy that they have Jesus' bosom and the state of glory above to flee to when they can get no peace nor rest in this world. The city, the church of God, may soon be fearfully corrupted by the influence of wicked rulers. And none are more apt to promote the corruption or betray the saints than apostate or empty professors. There has always been a sad mixture of such in the church. Carnal policy and selfish ends may carry men far and long in a religious profession, even where there is no sincerity of heart. Earnest prayers of faith are effectual to bring salvation from God. How shameful then is it that they are so little used; and that the stated meals for our bodies are more frequent than those for our souls! It is God's being on our side that raises us above fear from our adversaries. Too often want of trouble hardens men in bold impiety. But impentence and perdition are inseparably linked together. Falsehood and perfidy will quickly find a holy God. But happy, happy for ever, are they who trust in the Lord, and by the prayers of faith cast all their burdens, troubles, works, and cares upon God, as their God and Father in Christ!

PSALM LVI. Ver. 8. David wandered over nearly the whole of southern Palestine when Saul was pursuing him. In no spot was he safe, save amid the strongholds of the mountains. There is allusion in the mention of the bottle for tears, to the very ancient custom of preserving tears in little glass vessels, called lachrymatories. The last clause is somewhat obscure. The meaning would seem to be that all the afflictions and sorrows which visited him were well known to God. P.—A map of the recorded wanderings, or journeying of our Lord, is one of the most impressive sights for the human eye. Of his 'tears,' we know that twice he publicly wept, Lu. 19. 41; Jn. 11. 35; and that they flowed more frequently than recorded, Paul clearly declares. But his wanderings give us rest: his tears secured our joy. C.

Ver. 10. See note on ver. 4. In God—that is, in God, as revealed by his name or attribute of power to Abraham, Ge. 17. 1; and in Jehovah, as revealed to Moses by his name or attribute of uncaused and eternal existence, Ex. 3. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How inveterate is the enmity of the wicked against Jesus Christ and his people! With unanimity, cruelty, malice, restlessness, and craft, they exert themselves to destroy them, while they spy out their ways, wrest their words, and wait for their halting. But blessed are those trials which drive us nearer to God. Strong faith is necessary when troubles and dangers are very great. But the unchangeable promise of God, yea and amen in Christ, is not only sufficient ground of trust but of cordial praise. No enemies that we can have are too great for God to humble, or too secure, strong, or daring to withstand his blow. They who have him for their friend need not fear the impotent threats or strokes of human worms.

PSALM LVII.

1 David in prayer fleeing unto God, complaineth of his dangerous case. 7 He encourageth himself to praise God.

To the chief musician, Al-Taschith, Michtam¹ of David, when he fled from Saul in the cave.

BE merciful^b unto me, O God; be merciful unto me; for my soul trusteth in thee: yea, in^c the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast.

2 I will cry unto^d God most high; unto God that^e performeth all things for me.

3 He^f shall send from heaven, and save me from the reproach of him that would swallow me^g up. Selah. God^h shall send forth his mercy and his truth.

4 My soul is among lions: and I lie even among them that are set on fire,³ even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.⁴

5 Beⁱ thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.

6 They^k have prepared a net for my steps; my soul is bowed down: they have digged a pit before me, into the midst whereof they are fallen themselves. Selah.

7 My^l heart is fixed,⁵ O God, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise.⁶

8 Awakeⁿ up, my glory;⁷ awake, psaltery and harp: I myself will awake early.

9 I will praise thee, O LORD, among the people.⁸ I will sing unto thee among the nations:

10 For^o thy mercy is great unto the heavens,⁹ and thy truth unto the clouds.

11 Be^p thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.

PSALM LVIII.

1 David reproving wicked judges, 3 describeth the nature of the wicked, 6 and devoteth them to God's judgments, 10 whereat the righteous shall rejoice.

To the chief musician, Al-Taschith, Michtam¹ of David.

DO ye^a indeed speak righteousness, O congregation? do ye judge uprightly, O ye sons^b of men?

Saints may, nay must, weep in prayer for a time; but God regards every word, every tear; and will soon make them issue in praise to the weepers and in lasting ruin to their enemies. It is reasonable then that vows made, as well as mercies received, should animate us to trust in, pray to, serve and praise him, while we live in the enjoyment of the light of his countenance.

PSALM LVIII. Ver. 2. This psalm being quoted, Ro. 15. 9, forms a key for opening the true meaning of many parallel psalms. The complainant is there found to be Christ, offering prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, He. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 3. Messiah was reproached with meanness of rank, want of literature, base companionship, madness, leaguings with devils, sedition, blasphemy; and finally with the death of a malefactor—the cross. From all he was saved, by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, 1 Pe. 1. 12, and raising him from the dead, Ro. 1. 4. C.

Ver. 10. Unto the clouds—which, though apparently the most variable of all things, yet constantly testify by the rainbow the truth of the divine covenant, Ge. 9. 11–17. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While saints continue on earth they will still need prayer from their heart and mercy from their God. For into what devouring beasts, and deceitful devils, hath sin transformed their enemies! Heart, lips, and hands appear all animated by infernal malice and craft. But they have a God of salvation, a new relation in Jesus' blood, to secure their safety from all their enemies. And often, because of blindness, these enemies perish in the snares which they had laid for others. With what fixed thought, wonder, desire, and delight, with what ardour of inward powers, ought we then to praise and glorify God for the mercy that made and fulfils, and the faithfulness which establishes, every gracious promise! And with great fervour ought we to desire our Almighty Lord to glorify himself in heaven above and in all the earth below.

PSALM LVIII. Ver. 1. That Ps. xxxv. is a psalm of Christ, is obvious from comparing ver. 19 with Jn. 15. 25; and its parallelism with Ps. lviii, conduces to the conclusion that the congregation (ver. 1) is an appeal against the Sanhedrim who pronounced sentence against our Lord. C.

Ver. 4. Deaf adder. The deafness here attributed to the adder, is not deafness to sound, but to charming; so the ear of our Lord's judges was not deaf to evidence, but to just conclusions.—Note. The many statements made by travellers concerning serpent-charming in the East, seem to be nothing more than the evidences of intention and credulity of false pretensions, and successful juggling; nor do they receive any countenance; but, on the contrary, a flat contradiction, from the statement of the psalmist. C.

Ver. 6. Break their teeth, O God. For explanation and vindication of this and similar prayers in relation to the enemies of our Lord, see note on Ps. 5. 10; 35. 8. C.

Ver. 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns. Before the blaze from the dried thorn can ascend to the pot placed over it, the wicked shall be swept away; an expression of suddenness expressively equivalent to that of the apostle, 'in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,' 1 Co. 15. 52. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a plague to a church or nation are unjust rulers! Oppression by law is the

THE WALLS OF TIBERIAS—NEAR HAMATH, OF OLD TESTAMENT TIMES. [Psalms., lxxviii:27.]—"There is little Benjamin with their ruler, the princes of Judah and their council, the princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali." Tiberias was a city of Zebulun, and was formerly occupied, according to Joshua, xix:35, by Rakkath, and is also near the hot baths referred to in Joshua, xix:35 as Hamath. The walls of the city were rebuilt by Justinian.

The city was captured by the Persians under Khosroes in 614 B. C. In 1738 Dhahr-el-Amr built a fort on the hill north of Tiberias and repaired the walls of the city, which suffered terrible damage through the earthquake of 1837. There are now in Tiberias about six thousand people, four thousand of whom are Jews, three hundred are Christians and the rest Moslems. This is one of the four sacred cities of the Jews in Palestine.

He craveth help from God.

8 So^a will I sing praise unto thy name for ever, that I may daily perform my vows.

PSALM LXII.

1 David, professing his confidence in God, discourageth his enemies. 5 In the same confidence he encourageth the godly. 9 No trust is to be put in worldly things. 11 Power and mercy belong to God.

To the chief musician, to Jeduthun, A psalm of David.

TRULY¹ my^b soul waiteth² upon God: ³from him cometh my salvation.

2 He^d only is my rock and my salvation; ³he is my defence; I^e shall not be greatly moved.

3 How⁹ long will ye imagine mischief against a man? ye shall be slain all of you: ⁴as a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence.

4 Theyⁱ only consult to cast him down from his excellency: they delight in lies: they bless with their mouth, but they curse inwardly.⁵ Selah.

5 My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him.

6 He^k only is my rock and my salvation; ³he is my defence: I shall not be moved.

7 In God is my salvation and my glory: the rock of my strength, and my refuge, is in God.

8 Trust^a in him at all times; ye people, pour out your heart⁶ before him: God is a refuge for us. Selah.

PSALM LXIII.

1 David's thirst after God. 4 His manner of blessing God. 9 His confidence of his enemies' destruction, and of his own rejoicing.

A psalm of David, when he was in the wilderness of Judah.

O GOD, thou art my God; ²early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and ³thirsty land, where no water is;

2 To^e see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

3 Because ³thy loving-kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

4 Thus will I bless thee while I live: I will lift up my hands in thy name.

5 My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow

the restoration, the emblem also of the spiritual endowment and temporal blessedness of the Gentile church. C.

Ver. 6. Shechem was the first place in Canaan where ground was purchased for the permanent erection of the altar El-elohe-Israel, Ge. 33, 19. It was also the place to which Joshua summoned the tribes, and where they ratified their covenant with God, Jos. 24, 1, 25. It was also a city of refuge, Jos. 20, 7. It literally signifies a portion. From which four particulars, the meaning of the promise may be fully gathered. C.

Ver. 8. Washpot, or basin; not a phrase of contempt, or sign of servility, but rather of tender friendship and hospitable entertainment, see Lu. 7, 44; Jn. 13, 14, 15.—Cast my shoe. This phrase some interpret of taking possession; others of servile subjugation; is it not rather a token of friendly visitation, and peaceful entering into all the dwellings of the land, according to the eastern custom of putting off the shoes at the entrance of a dwelling or chamber?—Philistia! land of hereditary enemies, triumph in my victory of love that has conquered thy enmity. C.

Ver. 11. Vain is the help of man. Hence we learn that the victory expected is not that which can be wrought by the power or wrath of man—and not a victory over the literal Moab, Edom, and Philistia, but a spiritual victory of truth and love over the enemies of Jesus, represented by those nations. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What terrible rejection of God, what fearful convulsions and miseries in nations and churches, are occasioned by sin! But the deeper our distresses are, the more is the power and grace of our God magnified in our deliverance. Not David raised to a throne, according to promise, but Jesus exalted to his Father's right hand, and manifested in the truth of the gospel, is our banner displayed,—our means of victory and deliverance: let us then look to him and be saved. If sin has made deadly breaches, the sovereign grace of God can repair them. If we turn to him in prayer we may expect his return in mercy to us. Having loved us freely his right hand can save us. Our deliverance may be delayed, but faith triumphs. While Jesus subdues his opposers in mercy, or destroys all opposition, let us gladly receive him, and every promised blessing of grace or glory will necessarily follow. It may often happen that our bitterest enemies become our friends. At his pleasure he can unite nations and churches. Whatever difficulties then stand in our way let faith overcome them. Though we seem cast off, let us cleave fast to the promise, and trust and wait for the salvation of God. The greater our danger, our cries and prayers ought to be the more earnest. Let us put no trust in human helps; but in God's name and strength encounter our spiritual enemies; and so shall our victory be sure.

PSALM LXI. Ver. 1. That this is a prophetic prayer of the Messiah cannot be doubted, when the description of his immortal person and reign, ver. 6, 7, are considered. Of no other can they be spoken—of him they are literally true, therefore to him they infallibly belong. C.

Ver. 2. This is the prayer of an exile, far from home, and far from God's sanctuary. If written by David, as is probable, it must have been during Absalom's rebellion. Even then, when in trouble and in imminent danger, his faith in God does not desert him. Sustained by it he rises above temporary calamities and predicts his triumphant return to his home, and concludes with the noble declaration, 'So will I sing praise unto thy name for ever; that I may daily perform my vows.' P.—Higher than I. He that was 'in the form of God,' and who 'counted it not robbery to be equal with God,' having taken 'the form of a servant, and humbled himself,' uses these words, sustained by 'the joy set before him,' Phi. 2, 6-11; He. 12, 2, C.

REFLECTIONS.—Often are the saints overwhelmed with their sense of sin, their troubles, temptations, and fears. But whatever we be, and in whatever condition, a throne of grace and a prayer-hearing God are at hand to apply to. Jesus, the establishing and protecting Rock, is near; and his Word and Spirit are ready to lead us to him. And every former experience of protection or deliverance ought to encourage our flight to his refuge. Our trusting to his promises, perfectings, and providences, and our cordial worship of him here, will issue in our being for ever with him in his mansions of glory above.—God hears our prayers, regards our vows, and will provide for us everything good. We are heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ. Since King Jesus for ever lives, for ever sits enthroned amidst mercy and truth, we may confidently expect to live and reign with him in everlasting felicity and praise. Let then the vows which we have made be conscientiously performed; and let praising of God and paying of our vows be our daily employment.

PSALM LXII. Ver. 1. The speaker is one who boldly affirms, ver. 6, 'I shall not be moved.' He who can so speak cannot be David the son of Jesse, who was subject to so many vicissitudes; but his greater Son, who was never 'moved' from his purpose of grace, and cannot be 'moved' from his kingdom of glory. C.

Ver. 3. The second clause of this verse may be translated as follows: 'How long will ye assail (or attempt to slay)? all of you shall be as a bowing wall, a tottering fence; that is, though you attempt my life, ye shall fail; you will fall to the ground helpless as a shattered wall. P.

Ver. 9. A lie—not necessarily liars, but a lie, appearing to enjoy happiness, and secure a stable perpetuity, yet subject to as many sorrows and vicissitudes as the men of 'low degree,' by whom they are so often envied. C.

Ver. 10. Neither the pursuit, nor the acquirement, nor the possession of riches, is evil: the evil lies in the 'love of money,' and the consequent expulsion of God from the heart, 1 Jn. 2, 15. C.

Ver. 12. The general idea is that rank, wealth, worldly power, though good and useful in themselves when fairly acquired and rightly used, can never secure peace, or free man from trouble and death. To God alone belongeth true power, and he alone can give an eternal reward. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Patient and submissive resignation of our souls to God is the certain mean of a happy issue of all our troubles. He is the alone author and finisher of all our salvation. In so doing corruptions and temptations can shake us, but not drive us, either fully or finally, from grace. While liars and traitors meet with destruction from God, they who trust in him may defy hell or death to hurt them. In him they are saved, secured, strengthened, and protected; and in him, not in themselves, do they glory. The more their faith in him is exercised the stronger it becomes. The more we trust in men, or in worldly enjoyments, the more disappointment and hurt we shall meet with. But the more we depend on, cry to, or consider God, we shall find the more pleasure, safety, and comfort. The mercy and power which we see in him shall be employed to furnish, protect, and reward us, and to cut off our enemies.

PSALM LXIII. Ver. 1. David was away from the sanctuary when this psalm was written. It expresses the earnest longing desire of his soul for communion with God once again in his courts. The imagery is graphic. The desert traveller can fully realize it. As one longs for water in the parched wilderness, where the heaven is as brass and the earth as iron, so the psalmist longs for God. P.—On comparing Ac. 4, 25, 26 with Ps. ii.; 61, 66; 63, 11, there can remain no doubt that the King who speaks in this psalm is the Son of God, with whose supplications in the days of his flesh the ancient church was thus prophetically edified. C.

Ver. 2. This exactly corresponds with the prayer of our Lord, Jn. 17, 5, 'And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory that I had with thee before the world was.' C.

Ver. 11. Every one that sweareth by him shall glory. Every one that reverences his name, and acknowledges his omniscience and judgment. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a dry and barren wilderness is this world, with nothing in it that can satisfy the longings of a soul! And the more we find of the emptiness of created enjoyments the more we should fly to the fulness of God, as our God and all-sufficient portion. They who have experienced fellowship with him, and discoveries of his glory in public ordinances, will feelingly regret the want of them, and ardently desire the re-enjoyment of them. But great is the mercy that God himself, the fountain of happiness, and his throne of grace, are everywhere accessible. And if our hearts be refreshed with the tokens of his favour they ought to be enlarged in his praise. Happy and delightful is it to meditate on his loving-kindness—and in his strength to follow him closely in the means of grace and paths of duty. It is his help and favour only that can tune our hearts to praise him while we enjoy his protection.—Dreadful is the destruction of the enemies of Jesus Christ and his people! But eternal shall be the honours and unspeakable the joys of him and his children, while all their malicious reproachers and

PSALM LXIV.

2 Hide^a me from the ¹'secret counsel of the wicked; and from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity:

9 And ¹'all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God: for they shall ¹'wisely consider of his doing.

discouragers shall be filled with astonishment, and struck into endless silence and confusion.

PSALM LXIV. Ver. 1. The exact similarity of this psalm to Ps. lxxii. is sufficient external evidence that it is a prophetic prayer of Messiah; but there is an internal evidence that renders other proof unnecessary. The speaker (ver. 4) describes himself as the perfect, a description utterly inapplicable to any sinful man, and true only of the Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—A believer's troubles and enemies often fill his heart with fear, and drive him to his prayers. And in every age and place the bitterest words of reproach and infamy are liberally shot forth against the most faithful saints. Being perfect in Jesus' blessed sacrifice, and having the truth of grace in their hearts, they are hated by the world, who cannot bear their holy and heavenly conversation. Daring in wickedness, their enemies often neither fear God nor regard man, but encourage one another in sin; nor do they stick at anything to accomplish their malicious designs. With what care they pry into the faults of the godly, suborn false witnesses, wrest their words, and eke out their defamations with impudent falsehoods! but God will at last adjudge the injuries done to his people. And when he strikes home there is no escaping. Then the reproaches of PSALM LXV.

1 David praiseth God. 4 The blessedness of God's chosen, because of his infinite power and goodness.

To the chief musician, A psalm and song of David.

PRAISE waiteth¹ for thee, O God, ¹'in Zion: and unto thee ¹'shall the vow be performed.

2 O thou ¹'that hearest prayer, unto thee shall ¹'all flesh come.

3 ¹'Iniquities² prevail against me: as for our transgressions, thou shalt purge them away.

4 Blessed³ is the man whom thou choosest, and causeth to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts: we shall be ¹'satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple.³

5 By¹ terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O ¹'God of our salvation; who art the ¹'confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea:

6 Which by his strength ¹'setteth fast the mountains; being ¹'girded with power:

7 Which ¹'stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the ¹'tumult of the people.

8 They also that dwell in the uttermost parts are afraid at ¹'thy tokens: ¹'thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice.⁴

9 Thou visitest the earth, and waterest ¹'it; ¹'thou greatly enrichest it with the river of ¹'God, which is full of water; thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou settlest the furrows thereof;⁷ thou makest it soft⁸ with showers; thou ¹'blessest the springing thereof:

11 Thou crownest the year with thy goodness,⁹ and thy ¹'paths² drop fatness.

12 They^a drop upon the pastures of the wilderness; and the little hills³ rejoice on every side.⁴

earth, so barbarous as to deny the being and power of God. God's tokens in the heavens, in the seasons, in thunder, in earthquakes, and storms, produce in the ignorant a superstitious terror, and in the most instructed and pious humble and reverential awe. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Patient expectations for God shall be succeeded with joyful praises of him in his church and ordinances. And candid vows must be followed with conscientious fulfilment. God's readiness to hear prayer should encourage every one earnestly and hopefully to address him in every case: and sense of loading guilt or prevalent lusts ought not to make us despair, but to implore, believe, and admire the pardoning and sanctifying mercy of God. Fellowship with God is our greatest happiness. And it is not our merit, but his gracious love and blessed grace, that brings us to it. Nor must it be by transient starts, but by a fixed attendance on the ordinances of his grace, as nothing but the fulness of God in Christ can satisfy our hungry souls. And however terrible the answer must be, God never disappoints the prayers or hopes of his people. Wherever they may be in the world, they have equal access to him as their trust and salvation. Everywhere in the works of nature we may discern the power, wisdom, goodness, and greatness of God. And everything we receive from mountains, from seas, from lumi-

the wicked, and their horrid imprecations, shall draw down judgment on their own heads. And it is our wisdom to profit by the judgments of others. Too often warnings are lost through inconsideration. Even persecutors ought to learn and tremble while the door of mercy is yet open. And saints should rejoice in God's manifestation of his power and justice, and in their own deliverance; and trust in him, and make him their glory.

PSALM LXV. Ver. 1. Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion. 'Praise is silent for thee, O Lord,' silent, as if the heart of the church was too full of gratitude to find utterance; or, as an eastern servant, waiting in silence for a word or sign. C.

Ver. 3. 'Our iniquities have prevailed over us; but our trespasses thou hast covered.'—Boothroyd. An exact description of justification by grace. See Ro. 4:6-8. C.

Ver. 4. Blessed is the man, &c. The church here describes Messiah, upon whom all gifts originally descend, Ps. 68:18; Ep. 4:8, and from whom they come down in rich and plenteous effusion of the Spirit showing the things of Christ. C.

Ver. 5. By terrible things. The answer to all the prayers of faith is concentrated in the Father's sending his Son: and most terrible of all the works of God was the deliverance of that Son to the death for the church that he loved, Ep. 5:25-27. And when the church prays 'Thy kingdom come,' terrible are the judgments that will respond in the coming destruction of Satan's kingdom. C.

Ver. 8. There is no people, even in the uttermost parts of the PSALM LXVI.

1 David exhorteth to praise God, 5 to observe the great works, 8 to bless him for his gracious benefits, 13 He voweth for himself religious service to God. 16 He declareth God's special goodness to himself.

To the chief musician, A song or psalm.

2 Sing^a forth the honour of his name; make his praise glorious.

3 Say^b unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! ^cthrough the greatness of thy power³ shall thine enemies ^dsubmit themselves⁵ unto thee.

5 Come^e and see the works of God: ^fhe is terrible in his doing toward the children of men.

6 He^g turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 He^h ruleth by his power for ever; his eyes behold the nations: ⁱlet not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

8 O^k bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard;

9 Which holdeth⁷ our soul in life, and suffereth not our feet to be moved.

10 For^s thou, O God, ^thast proved us: thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.

11 Thou ^ubroughtest us into the net;⁹ thou laidest affliction upon our loins.

12 Thou hast caused men ^vto ride over our heads: we went ^wthrough fire and through water; but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy¹ place.

13 I^a will go into thy house with burnt-offerings; I will pay thee my vows,

No duty performed amidst indulged wickedness can be acceptable to God. But such as in faith pour out their hearts unto God without any allowed guile, may now begin their praises and thanksgiving, in the confidence that their requests are accepted, and shall in due time be answered.

aries, from rains, from pastures, from fields, ought, with thankful admiration and praise, to be received as his gift. But in these let me discern, as in a figure, how he establishes his church, his ordinances, and his people. He limits, restrains, and directs their raging troubles. He enlightens by the word of his grace and the influences of his Spirit. And while Jesus, the Sun of Righteousness, rises with healing under his wings, his showers of gospel declarations and spiritual influences drop down abundantly, for the nourishment, satisfaction, and joy of the human race.

PSALM LXVI. Ver. 12. Thou hast caused men, &c. The Egyptian horsemen, whose representative descendants continue to this day to pay little regard to the safety of the humbler classes; and would, without compunction or rebuke, literally 'ride over their heads.' The expression here may probably refer to some elevated position in which the Egyptian horse appeared when pursuing Moses and the Israelites to the Red Sea. See ver. 6. C.

Ver. 13. The speaker here, and to the end, is one—one who pays all his vows, and keeps all his resolutions—one so thoroughly wise, that he knows his own heart; and so thoroughly pure, that

(ver. 18) he disclaims all iniquity: one whose prayer, consequently, God hath not turned away, ver. 20. Are not these marks sufficient to show that this perfect one is the Christ, entering as High-priest into the holy place? C.

Ver. 15. Rams. These were the offerings of Aaron, the type of our Lord, at the time of ^ahis consecration, Le. 8. 18, 22, 28.—Bullocks. One bullock was Aaron's own offering for sin, Le. 8. 1, 14. The second for the peace-offerings of the people, Le. 9. 4. Goats were the sin-offerings of the people, Le. 9. 3, 15,—all types of that 'one sacrifice,' whereby Christ hath 'perfected for ever them that are sanctified.' REFLECTIONS.—With cordiality and joy ought all men to celebrate the praises of that God who is so great and so good to all. And as our fathers' sins should awaken our sorrows, their mercies should inflame our praise. But quickly shall antichristians and other enemies of our all-governing Lord Jesus be made to bow or be destroyed before him! All the trials of churches or saints, their support and protection in them, and the happy issue of them, ought, and shall be, matter of cordial and lasting praise: and to make vows in an evangelical manner when under trouble is to take pity,¹ but^a there was none;² and for comforters, but I found none.

21 They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.

22 Let^a their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap.³

23 Let^a their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake.

24 Pour^a out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.

25 Let their habitation^a be desolate; and let none dwell⁵ in their tents.

26 For^a they persecute him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief of those whom thou hast wounded.⁶

27 Add^a iniquity⁷ unto their iniquity;⁸ and let them not come into thy righteousness.

28 Let^a them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous.

29 But^a I am poor and sorrowful: let thy salvation, O God, set me up on high.

30 I^a will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving.

31 This^a also shall please the LORD better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs.

32 The^a humble⁹ shall see this, and be glad; and thy heart shall live that seek God.

33 For^a the LORD heareth the poor, and despiseth not his prisoners.¹

34 Let^a the heaven and earth praise him, the seas, and every thing that moveth² therein:

35 For^a God will save Zion, and will build the cities of Judah; that they may dwell there, and have it in possession.

36 The^a seed also of his servants shall inherit it; and they that love his name shall dwell therein.

Ver. 4. 'Magnify him who rideth over the Arabah by his name JAH, and rejoice before him.' Reference is here made to the journey of the Israelites through the wilderness, and especially along the valley of Arabah to and from Kadesh. There God went before them in the cloudy pillar; there he proclaimed to them his name JEHOVAH; there he gave them displays of his power and mercy, such as had never been witnessed. P.—By his name JAH. 'In JAH is his name,' Horsley. That is, Christ, who was with the church through the wilderness, has his personal and official name in JAH, the unity of the self-existent Trinity. C.

Ver. 11. Company. The original directs to those female choir (see ver. 25) who, in sweet, and holy, and joyful song, published the mercies of the Lord. See, as examples, Ex. 15. 20; 1 Sa. 18.6. C.

Ver. 12. Allusion is made to the conquests of Moses and Joshua on entering Palestine. P.

Ver. 13. The whole book of Psalms presents no greater difficulty than this verse, and conjectures and emendations have been proportionally numerous. The words supplied in the authorized version render the passage prophetic; but the adjoining verses are merely narrative. May we not therefore rather understand the passage thus:—'Ye have shared the spoil (though ye lay timidly at home, hid among the pots), and are now garnished in these spoils as the wings of a dove covered with silver,' &c. C.

Ver. 22. My people. Is it not rather the enemy, that God proposes to bring from Bashan on the east, and the sea on the west, that judgment may be executed upon their sins? Joel 3. 2, 12; Re. 16.16. C.

Ver. 27. In the solemn procession, mentioned in ver. 24, all these tribes were present.—Benjamin on this occasion leading the way; the vast multitudes of Judah following: then the chiefs of Zebulun and Naphtali, representing probably the confederation of the northern tribes. P.

Ver. 30. The meaning of the whole verse is, that the most formidable enemies of the people of God, represented here by wild beasts, would be subdued, and would be made to show their submission by bringing presents,—by 'pieces of silver,'—or with tribute. Thus, the idea corresponds with that in the previous verse, that kings would bring presents (Barnes). P.—Calves of the people. The idolatrous worshippers of the Egyptian calf-gods.—Note, Such is the blindness of the human heart, that the cow is still worshipped as a deity in India! C.

REFLECTIONS.—No hatred, no opposition of men or devils, could exclude our Redeemer from his glory. However strong or obstinate his enemies, they are overcome by his power. But happy—thrice happy are they who have by faith accepted this glorious, this gracious JEHOVAH to be their God! Behold how he protects his afflicted church and people; raises up families of saints in our Gentile world; delivers the prisoners of sin and Satan from their chains of corruptions and curses! while sinners bring to themselves eternal ruin! Behold him leading up his people from their spiritual bondage, and by his Word and Spirit directing them in their paths! By his almighty influence he brought down all opposition. By showers of gospel truths and spiritual influences he quickens all who yield themselves to Christ. By the multitudes of his apostles and ministers he published the glad tidings of salvation. Through their faith he saves hell-enslaved sinners by his blood, and adorns them with his righteousness and grace. He established his church firm and high as mountains which cannot be moved, and from which he will never depart. While angelic hosts are her guard, the ascending Redeemer is her conquering head, her treasury, and almoner. How great are his triumphs, his grace, his glory! Never pardoned rebel owed such gratitude to his generous prince as every pardoned sinner owes to his Lord. Never is he weary of showing mercy. And even death is disarmed to them who by faith accept him and his salvation. But dreadful is the fate of obstinate Jews and others who oppose the designs of his grace; and behold, when he went forth in the ordinances of the gospel, by his apostles and other missionaries, how Jews and Gentiles saw his glory, sang his praise, and submitted themselves to his government!

PSALM LXIX. Ver. 1. It is impossible to question that this is a prayer of our Lord. See especially ver. 9, first clause, compare with Jn. 2. 17, also ver. 9, second clause, with Ro. 15. 3, and ver. 25, also with Jn. 19. 28; and surely it is impossible to doubt that Christ is the speaker of the whole psalm! See also further references, Jn. 15. 25; Lu. 23. 34-38; Ro. 11. 9, 10; Ac. 1. 16, 20. C.

Ver. 22. Nothing is more certain than that God judicially delivers wicked men over to the counsels of their own hearts, and surely what God will righteously do, Christ as Judge may righteously call upon him to do. In this case, he calls upon him to deliver over the epicurean idolater, 'whose god is his belly,' Phi. 3. 19, so that his love of gluttony and drunkenness may become his punishment. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I read these things let me, with deep concern, by faith behold my Redeemer charged in law with my sins and bearing my punishment. Let me learn with patience to run the race of holy obedience, and of necessary trials set before me, looking to Jesus as my pattern, and as the author and finisher of my faith. While I behold the tremendous severity of God's judgments against his ancient people for rejecting and murdering his Son, let me not be high-minded, but fear.—Let me behold the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich.—And let me be a living and lively

PSALM LXX.

David prayeth for God's speedy help and deliverance, to the confusion of his enemies, and triumph of the godly.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

MAKE haste, O God, to deliver me; make haste to help me, O LORD.²

2 Let^a them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul; let them be turned backward, and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.

3 Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, aha!

4 Let^a all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: and let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.

5 But^a I am poor and needy: make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O LORD, make no tarrying.

PSALM LXXI.

1 David, in confidence of faith, and experience of God's favour, prayeth both for himself, and against the enemies of his soul. 14 He promiseth acts of praise. 17 He prayeth not to be abandoned in the decline of life. 19 He praiseth God, and promiseth to do it cheerfully.

IN thee, O LORD, do I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion.

2 Deliver^b me in thy righteousness, and cause me to escape: incline thine ear unto me, and save me.

3 Be thou my strong habitation,¹ whereunto I may continually resort: thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.

4 Deliver^a me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5 For^a thou art my hope, O Lord God: thou art my trust from my youth.

6 By^b thee have I been holden up from the womb: thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels: my praise shall be continually of thee.

member of that church which is founded in his blood, and blessed in him with all spiritual blessings.

PSALM LXX. Ver. 1. This psalm exemplifies the two chief principles for interpretation of the Psalms, viz. 1. Quotation and exposition in the New Testament. 2. Parallelism of sentiment between those which New Testament quotation applies to Christ and those not so quoted. The parallelism between Ps. lxx. and lxx. proves Ps. lxx. to belong to Christ; but this fact is put beyond question by its identity with Ps. 40. 13-17, which psalm is distinctly applied to Christ, He. 10. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While here also I behold Jesus Christ in great abasement, poverty, and distress, denouncing just and fearful punishment on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, and other enemies; and interceding for the joy and happiness of all people; to his Father's honour let me apply these things to my own troubled circumstances, and so, in a believing manner, bring them and the sinful causes thereof to my remembrance. Urgent trials should always awaken fervent prayers.

PSALM LXXI. Ver. 2. Deliver me in thy righteousness. A sinner is to be delivered only in mercy—the sin-bearing Saviour alone in righteousness. By this mark it is evident, that if the speaker was guided by the Spirit of knowledge, a point not to be doubted, he must be the Christ. C.

Ver. 9. Old age. Inasmuch as our Lord died literally young, this verse is supposed necessarily to indicate another speaker. But old age is not absolute, but comparative. Thus it is common to speak of premature old age, a fact evidently true of our Lord, whom a little after thirty the Jews supposed fifty. The period referred to, when, as in old age, his strength failed, seems literally, that, when worn out with sleeplessness, buffetings, and scourging, and, tottering under his cross, Simon of Cyrene was compelled to carry it, Jn. 19. 17; Lu. 23. 26. 7 I 'am as a wonder unto many:² but^a thou art my strong refuge.

8 Let^a my mouth be filled with thy praise and with thy honour all the day.

9 Cast^a me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth.

10 For^a mine enemies speak against me; and they that lay wait³ for my soul take counsel together, 11 Saying, "God hath forsaken him: persecute and take him; for there is none to deliver him.

12 O "God, be not far from me: O my God, make haste for my help.

13 Let^a them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul;⁴ let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

14 But^a I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more.

15 My^a mouth shall show forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; for "I know not⁵ the numbers thereof.

16 I^a will go in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention "of thy righteousness, even of thine only.

17 O God, "thou hast taught me from my youth; and hitherto "have I declared thy wondrous works.⁶

18 Now also when I am old and gray-headed,⁷ O God, forsake me not; until "I have showed thy strength⁸ unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.⁹

19 Thy^b righteousness also, O God, is very high, "who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee?

20 Thou, "which hast showed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the "earth.

And if we hope for eternal happiness, let us do what we can to spread the honour and good savour of Christ on earth! For how becoming is it for aged saints to be remarkable in cheerfully expecting good at the hand of God; and to have heart, and lips, and life all filled with his praise! How pleasant is it to step as it were into heaven, scarcely needing to change either our work or our song!

PSALM LXXII. Ver. 1. The strict parallelism of the opening of this with Ps. ii., and the New Testament application of that psalm to Christ, necessarily leads to a similar application here. Christ was King, as chosen, sent, and exalted of the Father; he was also the King's Son, as, according to the flesh, he was the Son of David. C.

Ver. 5. This exemplifies an important principle of interpretation, viz. what cannot be true of David or any other mere man, but is true of Messiah, is not to be applied to any mere man, but to "the Word that was God," and was, for our salvation, "made flesh," and of whom the description is strictly accurate. See also ver. 7. C.

Ver. 7. The moon is here introduced as the emblem of successive change of aspect, with permanence of nature, and faithfulness of service; the measuring out of the returning periods for renovated joy, in which she places before the world at once the character both of providence and grace. C.

Ver. 11. This can only be true of Messiah, never of David or Solomon, whose kingdom, in its highest splendour, was of very limited extent and of brief duration. C.

Ver. 17. The marks of Messiah are here so distinct, that they must be acknowledged. How sweet the name of Jesus to the ear, how glorious to the eye—it is the theme of heaven's loudest song, it is the light of heaven's brightest sun, "and blessed be his glorious name to all eternity. The whole earth let his glory fill. Amen! so let it be!" C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how Jesus Christ, endowed with the Holy Ghost above measure, and with all 21 Thou shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side.

22 I will also praise thee with the psaltery,² even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou Holy One of Israel.

23 My lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

24 My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long: for they are confounded, for^k they are brought unto shame, that seek my hurt.³

PSALM LXXII.

¹ David, praying for Solomon, sheweth the happiness, justice, and glory of his reign, and of Christ's kingdom under that type. 18 He blesteth God.

A psalm for Solomon.²

GIVE the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son.

2 He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment.

3 The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness.

4 He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.

5 They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations.

6 He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth.

7 In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth.³

8 He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

1 Or, O, Ps. 127.

2 It is highly probable that this psalm was composed by David when Solomon was crowned as his successor on the throne. The general scope accords with this idea. But at the same time it is evident that, in the fulness of its meaning, the psalm is not, and cannot be, applicable to Solomon and his reign. It has a higher reality. Solomon was but the type of a greater King, The Messiah was the anti-type, and the ultimate sense of many of the expressions culminated in him.—P.

power in heaven and earth, reigns over his gospel church! In infinite equity and wisdom he conducts his whole administration. By his righteousness he secured, by his intercession he procures, and by his word, ordinances, and Spirit, he confers on men peace with God, peace in the conscience, and with one another. Poor destitute sinners he supplies from his fulness of blessings, and delivers them from the hand of sin, Satan, and the world, their oppressors. His spiritual influences, coming down in their season, shall render believers flourishing and fruitful in holiness. And how extensive his gospel church, comprehending both Jews and Gentiles—the wildest Arabs and most distant islanders not excepted! In it persons of every station, but chiefly of the poor, submit to his yoke, and devote themselves and all that they have to his service. Earnest are their prayers for his presence and power in his ordinances, and for his coming in the clouds; and high their songs of praise to his name. What commendations of him are in the word of the gospel! From him the corn of wheat, sown in death upon Calvary, and from the handful of gospel truth, sown among hardened hearts, shall proceed converts, strong and tall in grace as the cedars of Lebanon, and numerous as the piles of grass. How lasting is his kingdom, and how certainly useful for diffusing every spiritual blessing among those who accept Jesus Christ! United to his person, and sharing of his benefits, let us wish well to his interests and honour, and admire, adore, and praise JEHOVAH in him, as the author of all the wonders of providence and grace.

PSALM LXXIII. Ver. 1. Israel. Those who wrestle with God for a blessing, and will not let him go till they receive it, and, with it or in it, that new name which the Spirit of adoption alone can bestow, Ge. 22. 24–30. C.

Ver. 5. The freedom of thoughtless sinners from trouble arises from ignorance of themselves, disregard of futurity, and want of sympathy with a world lying in misery, because lying in wickedness. C.

Ver. 9. Walketh. Their tongue assails every one; none can escape its ridicule, contempt, censure, calumnies, or condemnation. C.

Ver. 10. 'His people return hither.' Therefore his (God's) people turn aside hither, to the service of these prosperous men, and waters of a full cup (of oppression) are wrung out from them in bitter tears. C.

Ver. 17. Sanctuary. This word never signifies sanctuary, in the singular, but signifies 'the secret principles of God's providential government.' C.

Ver. 18. The wicked are here referred to, and the true nature of God's dealings with them. To human appearance they were prosperous and secure: but in reality their condition was one of uncertainty and danger, from which they must inevitably fall. Ultimate ruin is before them whatever may be their apparent security now. P.

Ver. 22. So foolish. The whole gospel of Christ is called foolishness by the world, and 'he that would be wise must become a fool.' The very apostles were 'fools for Christ's sake,' 1 Co. 1. 18. 3. 18. 4. 10. C.

Ver. 23. Notwithstanding this low estimation of men, I am still with thee. Here we have a distinct note that the speaker, inquirer, and expounder of providence, is no other than Christ. C.

Ver. 24. This is another mark of Christ, not a prayer for guidance and glory, but a confident announcement like that in Jn. 17. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In our perplexing difficulties we ought to recur to the first principles of our most holy faith. And never should we lose the views of God's kindness to those who are washed in the blood and sanctified by the Spirit of his Son. Often the strongest believers are most violently tempted, and dragged to the very brink of death and destruction; while God, in this world, marks his enemies and friends in the most perplexing manner. The sinner often prospers to his ruin; and whom he loves he corrects and scourges for their profit. What need then have we to attend closely to his word as our rule; and amidst perplexing providences to wait till we see the end of the Lord! The worst that a good man hath is better than the prosperity of many wicked, which but brings them to everlasting ruin and hastens them into it. But whatever sad lengths the afflictions and temptations of the godly draw them, they should lead to instruction, humiliation, comfort, and holiness. When atheistical thoughts arise in our hearts, they must be carefully and quickly suppressed. We must never grieve nor stumble the children of God by representing his service as vain and unprofitable. And it is not the strongest carnal reasoning, but fellowship with God in his word and ordinances, that can illuminate a darkened soul, or disentangle from an ensnaring temptation. Great is the mercy when God relieves his children who had, by their envy and fretfulness, become their own tormentors; and that even at their worst he never ceases to attend and support them as weak infants in his family. But bright views of God and eternal things are sometimes ushered in by great darkness and trouble of mind. Holiness here and glory hereafter are closely connected. And little reason hath one, guided of God, and an heir of everlasting happiness, nay, of God himself, and a joint-heir with Christ, to envy the earthly happiness of the wicked. How insignificant other things appear when compared with the everlasting enjoyment of the INFINITE ALL, the REDEEMING GOD-HEAD! How light and easy are death and trouble when considered as our way to it! While apostates from God hasten towards endless perdition, let me therefore draw near to him, in habitual fellowship with him. Let me by faith depend on his promise, that here and hereafter my lips may be filled with his praise.

PSALM LXXIV. Ver. 1. This title (compare Ps. 95. 7 with He. 3. 17), together with the plurality and circumstances of the form of speech, clearly point to a church cruelly persecuted, and a nation grievously oppressed, pouring out their complaints, not in the ears of men, but of God. C.

Ver. 5. 'As men are seen with uplifted axes, cutting down the thick wood, so the whole carved work of thy temple with chisel

ALTAR OF LATIN CHURCH, NAZARETH—ON THE SITE OF THE HOUSE WHERE CHRIST LIVED. [Psalms, lxxii:8.]—"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." It seems as if the prophecies quoted from the above Psalm have been fulfilled when we remember that churches now stand in nearly all of the great cities of the world. The Latin church in Nazareth is called the Church of the Annunciation. The modern city of Nazareth consists of stone houses with flat roofs. The Church of the Annunciation is small, but it is decorated with pictures of great beauty and with finely wrought marble. It is said to stand on the site of the house of Mary. The church was begun in 1620 out of materials which remained from the ruins of former structures of a similar character. It was destroyed by an earthquake in 1837, but has been rebuilt. The name of Nazareth does not occur in the Old Testament nor in Josephus.

PSALM LXXIII.

1 The psalmist, prevailing in a temptation, 2 sheweth the occasion thereof, the prosperity of the wicked. 13 The wound given thereby, diffidence. 15 The victory over it, knowledge of God's purpose, in destroying of the wicked, and sustaining the righteous.

A psalm of Asaph.

TRULY² God^a is good to Israel, *even to such as are of a clean heart.*³

2 But as for me, my feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped.⁴

3 For^a I was envious⁵ at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked:

4 For^a there are no bands in their death; but their strength is *firm.*⁷

5 They^a are not in trouble as other men;⁸ neither are they plagued like other men:

6 Therefore^a pride compasseth them about as a chain; violence covereth them as a garment.

7 Their^a eyes stand out with fatness: they have more than heart could wish.¹

8 They^a are corrupt, and speak wickedly concerning oppression: they speak loftily.

9 They^a set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth.

10 Therefore his people return hither; and waters^a of a full cup are wrung out to them.

11 And they say,² How^a doth God know? and is there knowledge in the most High?

12 Behold,² these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches.

13 Verily^a I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency.³

14 For^a all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened^a every morning.

15 If I say, I will speak thus; behold, I should offend against the generation of thy children.

16 When^a I thought to know this, it was too painful⁵ for me,⁶

17 Until^a I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their end.

18 Surely^a thou didst set them in slippery places; thou castedst them down into destruction.

19 How^a are they brought into desolation, as in a moment! they are utterly consumed with terrors.

20 As^a a dream when one awaketh; so, O LORD, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image.⁷

21 Thus^a my heart was grieved, and I was pricked in my reins.

22 So^a foolish was I, and ignorant:⁹ I was as a beast¹ before thee.²

23 Nevertheless^a I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand.

24 Thou^a shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory.

1 The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of the sanctuary. 10 He moveth God to help in consideration of his power, 18 of his reproachful enemies, of his children, and of his covenant.

fellow-citizens, by cutting down timber in the mountains for Solomon; but now, our Gentile invaders with axes and hammers, recklessly tear down the exquisite carved work of the temple, dedicated by the piety of former years.' C.

Ver. 9. No more any prophet. This statement has been supposed to carry the date of the psalm beyond the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, because the prophet Jeremiah was then alive. But may not the psalm have been composed by one of the pious rem-

MOUNT OF OLIVES FROM ZION'S GATE—OVER WHICH DAVID WALKED AND WEPT DURING ABSALOM'S REBELLION. [Psalms, lxxiv:2.]—"Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this Mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt." Mount Zion occupies the southwest section of the city. The west and south sides rise abruptly from the valley of Hinnom, and the south brow of Zion is bold and prominent. The Mount of Olives from Mount Zion is an inspiring sight. The graceful outlines of the Mount of Olives are conspicuous from every part of the city. We see on the summit of the central crest the lofty tower erected by the Russians. There are many buildings upon the Mount of Olives and they interfere with the simple beauty of the sacred hill. It is over the Mount of Olives that David ascended when fleeing from his rebel son Absalom (II. Samuel, xv:30).

8 For¹ in the hand of the LORD there is⁹ a cup, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture: and he poureth out of the same: but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.

9 But¹ I will declare for ever; I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.¹

10 Allⁿ the horns of the wicked also will I cut off; but⁹ the horns of the righteous shall be exalted.

PSALM LXXVI.

1 A declaration of God's majesty in the church. 11 An exhortation to serve him reverently.

To the chief musician on⁹ Neginoth, A psalm or song of¹ Asaph.

IN Judah⁹ is God known: his⁹ name is great in Israel.

2 In² Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion.

3 There⁹ brake he the arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battle. Selah.

4 Thou art more glorious and excellent than the mountains of prey.

5 The⁹ stout-hearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep; and none of the men of might have found their hands.³

6 At¹ thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse⁴ are cast into a dead sleep.

7 Thou, even thou, art to be feared: and who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?

8 Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from heaven; the earth feared, and was still,

9 When God arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth. Selah.

10 Surely⁹ the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain.

11 Vow,⁹ and⁵ pay unto the LORD your God: let all that be round about him bring presents unto him that ought to be feared.⁶

12 He⁹ shall cut off the spirit of princes: he is terrible to the kings of the earth.

nant that still lingered, in sorrow, amidst the ruins of the temple, after Jeremiah was carried down from Mizpah to Egypt (Je. 43. 6), and is it not, most probably, an expression of regret for that rebellious act of abduction? C.

Ver. 17. Summer and winter. Therefore the God by whose power the glory of light emerges from the deformity of darkness, and the beauty of summer from the desolation of winter, is able to grant deliverance from enemies, and bring comfort out of sorrow. See ver. 10. C.

Ver. 20. 'The prayer in this passage may with propriety be used by the people of God now. It is still true that the dark parts of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty; and in view of this fact, and of the utter hopelessness of the renovation of the world by any human means, or by any progress which society can make of itself, it is proper to seek God's interposition. And it is proper in such prayers to him now, to make the ground of our appeal to him his own gracious covenant; his promises made to his church; his solemn assurance that this state of things shall not always continue, but that the time will arrive when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord' (Barnes). P.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! to what melancholy apprehensions of their state and case are the people of God sometimes reduced! They fear that the rod of his correction is the sword of his judgment. But though he cast them down, he will not forsake believers. They who are redeemed by Jesus' blood should not come under the bondage of corruption. The favours which they have received are a presage, and ought to be made a plea for greater. While worldly minds feel only worldly crosses, the interests of religion and welfare of the church are incomparably dearest to the children of God. And however certain the ruin which will fall upon the destroyers of his church at last, it is extremely affecting to behold them making havoc of God's truths, ordinances, or people, while there is none to comfort us or to explain the dark providences. But under sore troubles it is proper to commemorate and plead upon God's former and distinguished mercies. He who divided the Red Sea and destroyed Pharaoh and his host, and who brought waters from the rock for Israel; he who is the Sovereign of nature, can, at his pleasure, command our and his church's deliverance. Importunate wrestlings and pleadings with God for the relief of his church, which is so dear to him, and for fulfilling his promise, of which he is ever mindful, and for destroying his daring and implacable reproachers, will not be long unanswered.

PSALM LXXV. Ver. 3. The single speaker can be no other than Messiah, prophetically arrived in his church. None but Christ alone could, without vain boasting and arrogance, attribute to himself such mighty power.—Note. The world, with all its institutions, is preserved from ruin merely that Christ may be glorified. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While we think of Jesus Christ, whom God has marvellously crowned with glory and honour, and of the infinite danger of opposing his government, let us remark what wonderful works of God have been exercised to usward. Great is the praise which we owe to God on every review of his mercies. Important and useful is the charge which is committed to magistrates and ministers: and there is great need of activity and care in their administrations, as they must be accountable to God, from whom they received their power. One true patriot may sometimes save a disjointed church or state from impending ruin. But vain and dangerous is it to withstand God's deputies. The righteous shall be advanced and flourish, while obstinate sinners shall be plunged into everlasting misery.

PSALM LXXVI. Ver. 1. In Judah God is known. God was known in the doctrine that expressed his nature—in the commandments that prescribed his will—in the history that recorded his acts—and the prophecy that foretold his coming to salvation, victory, and judgment. C.

Ver. 4. This is a passage of great difficulty. May it not be paraphrased thus: 'Thou Zion, undistinguished among cities, art yet, as the dwelling-place of God, more excellent than them all; and thou, Salem, taught by thy very name to cultivate peace, art yet, in that peace of God, more glorious than the mountains of the warriors—their strongholds and fortresses—enriched and stored with all the spoils of conquest.' C.

Ver. 9. Though spoken of as an event past, these words are evidently a description of a time still future—a mode of speech common with the prophets (see, for example, Is. 5. 3), the time at which God will arise and have mercy upon Zion, and save in his judgment all the meek of the earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those nations and churches which have the knowledge and presence of God in them! How profitable, pleasant, and enriching! Gloriously he protects them in danger, and destroys their enemies, however mighty or numerous. Their tyrannical oppressors, though like mountains of prey, shall destroy themselves utterly. His meek ones must indeed patiently wait awhile; but at last he will, to the terror of all around, appear for their relief. Whatever his people suffer shall but brighten their graces and 15 He^a clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

16 He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

17 And they sinned yet more against him, by provoking the most High in the wilderness.

18 And they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust.

19 Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can God furnish a table in the wilderness?

20 Behold, he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore the LORD heard this, and was wroth; so a fire⁹ was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel;

22 Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation;¹

23 Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven, 24 And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 Man did eat angels' food: he sent them meat to the full.

26 He^b caused an east wind to blow⁴ in the heaven; and by his power he brought in the south wind.

27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and feathered fowls⁵ like as the sand of the sea;

28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 So they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They were not estranged from their lust: but while their meat was yet in their mouths, 31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and smote down the chosen men⁷ of Israel.

32 For all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works.

33 Therefore their days did he consume in vanity, and their years in trouble.

36 Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues.

37 For their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his covenant.

38 But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not; yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath.

39 For he remembered that they were but flesh; a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.

Ver. 9. Ephraim. Ephraim is selected to exemplify the result of unsteadiness, (1) Because, as the chief son of Joseph, he inherited peculiar promises, Ge. 48. 20. (2) Because Ephraim was the ruling tribe at entering Canaan under Joshua. (3) Because Ephraim attained to supreme power in the ten tribes, Is. 7. 9. (4) Because Ephraim became conspicuous among the tribes for dissolution of morals and idolatry, Is. 17. 28; Ho. 8. 11. (5) Because in their danger they sought not God, but Assyria, Ho. 5. 13. And (6) Because God visited them with calamities as conspicuous as the privileges they abused, Ho. 5. 9, 12. C.

Ver. 32. To many unthinking persons it appears strange, almost, if not altogether, beyond credibility, that the Israelites could receive so many mercies, and feel so many judgments, and yet remain the sensual, stupid, stiff-necked, rebellious, and incorrigible people they are represented to have been. A little consideration of the disregard of God's mercies and judgments that may still be seen in the world would soon remove this surprise or incredulity, and enforce the conviction, that the providence of God, and the blindness and rebellion of men, still continue, as in the days of Moses, to refuse to be enlightened, and to spurn the hand that relieves and feeds them. C.

Ver. 34. When he slew them, &c. That is, when he was slaying them, then, out of fear, they sought him; an occurrence every day exemplified in sick-bed professions of sorrow for past sins; and resolutions of amendment for the future—professions and resolutions that are often forgotten so soon as returning health prepares the way for renewed temptation. C.

Ver. 57. Deceitful bow. The eastern bow is ordinarily composed of several pieces of different elastic materials, and when unstrung is recurved nearly into the form of a hoop; and, if the elastic tendency of the curvature vary in the least from the plane of the string, the bow, when the arrow is discharged, will unstring itself and spring back, and the arrow will fall at the feet of the archer. C.

Ver. 59. When God heard this. We know little more of the relations between men and angels, than that 'they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' and that there is 'joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth'—but these words seem also to intimate that the idolatries and other apostasies of the church may be brought up in heavenly records, or—if such in heaven there may be—even in holy lamentations 'to the ears of the God of Sabaoth.' C.

Ver. 64. No lamentation. It has often been remarked that among the many evils of continued public calamities, none is more grievous than the almost total destruction of sympathy and natural affection, and the paramount domination of selfishness. No instance can be more remarkable than that of a widow whose heart has been rendered so callous that she drops no tear of sorrow to the memory of the husband of her youth! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Important are the great things of God's law and the matters of our eternal salvation; and they demand the most serious attention. With great care ought parents to instruct children in the knowledge of the great truths and works of God. Neglect of this issues in children's unbelief, hypocrisy, and lasting ruin. And to avoid the bad effects of parents' guilt, children of wicked men ought to be doubly careful to avoid imitating them. How weak men are when God is their enemy; and how cowardly when their consciences are burdened with guilt! No miracles, however gracious and striking, can melt an ignorant and hardened heart, or induce it to gratitude. No favours will satisfy a discontented spirit, and restrain its malicious murmurings against God. With amazing patience and kindness God provides for his abusers amongst mankind! But when he gratifies sinners in their requests, his gifts become their snare and curse: this world's abundance is abused to excess: reflection is banished: and men hurry headlong into ruin. They who make a god of their belly will find their end to be destruction: and they who will not be bowed by mercies or corrections must be broken by judgments. If sin be indulged sorrow must follow. Nor shall the stoutest be able to resist the uplifted arm of an angry God. Troubles often force men to their profession, prayers, or tears, whose wickedness is quickly thereafter discovered. The danger is scarcely blown over when all their convictions and promises are forgotten and contemned.—O the infinite compassion and patience of God towards all professing people! But, alas! his most singular favours and tremendous judgments are soon forgotten and despised!—The creatures of God sometimes become means, and in the most fearful manner cover his enemies with ruin. But abundant returns of thankfulness, love, and service are due to him from those to whom he has been liberal of his favours. How ready are most to imitate their wicked progenitors, to the dishonour of their gracious God! But more fearfully criminal is the unfaithful-

To this day the poor Jews tremble at stated times outside the massive wall of the ancient temple area, and, wailing, chant these lines. P.

REFLECTIONS.—To what fearful and lasting distress and desolation is the church of God sometimes brought, while forced to bear at once the cruelty and derision of men and the manifested displeasure of God! But he will assuredly visit with his wrath such as live in ignorance of him and neglect of his worship. And though he permit his people to be

PSALM LXXX.

1 The psalmist in his prayer complaineth of the miseries of the church. 8 God's former favours are turned into judgments. 14 He prayeth for deliverance.

To the chief musician upon "Shoshannim-Eduth, A psalm of Asaph."

GIVE ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth.

2 Before Ephraim, and Benjamin, and Manasse, stir up thy strength, and come and save us.

3 Turn us again, O God, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

4 O LORD God of hosts, how long wilt thou be angry against the prayer of thy people?

5 Thou feedest them with the bread of tears; and givest them tears to drink in great measure.

6 Thou makest us a strife unto our neighbours; and our enemies laugh among themselves.

7 Turn us again, O God of hosts, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

8 Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt: thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it.

9 Thou preparedst room before it, and didst cause it to take deep root, and it filled the land.

10 The hills were covered with the shadow of it: and the boughs thereof were like the goodly cedars.

11 She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river.

12 Why hast thou then broken down her hedges, so that all they which pass by the way do pluck her?

13 The boar out of the wood doth waste it, and the wild beast of the field doth devour it.

14 Return, we beseech thee, O God of hosts: look down from heaven, and behold, and visit this vine;

15 And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, and the branch that thou madest strong for thyself.

16 It is burnt with fire, it is cut down: they perish at the rebuke of thy countenance.

17 Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the son of man whom thou madest strong for thyself.

18 So will we not go back from thee: quicken us, and we will call upon thy name.

19 Turn us again, O LORD God of hosts, cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

PSALM LXXXI.

1 An exhortation to a solemn praising of God. 4 God challengeth that duty by reason of his benefits. 8 God, exhorting to obedience, complaineth of their disobedience, which proveth their own hurt.

To the chief musician upon "Gittith, A psalm of Asaph."

SING aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob.

2 Take a psalm, and bring hither the timbrel, the pleasant harp with the psaltery.

3 Blow up the trumpet in the new-moon, in the time appointed, on our solemn feast-day.

4 For this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob.

5 This he ordained in Joseph for a testimony, when he went out through the land of Egypt: where I heard a language that I understood not.

6 I removed his shoulder from the burden: his hands were delivered from the pots.

7 Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee; I answered thee in the secret place of thunder: I proved thee at the waters of Meribah. Selah.

8 Hear, O my people, and I will testify unto thee; O Israel, if thou wilt hearken unto me;

9 There shall no strange god be in thee; neither shalt thou worship any strange god.

PSALM LXXXI. Ver. 1. God is called the God of Jacob, in reference to the following circumstances in Jacob's history:— (1) He was a specimen, representative, or type of the electing grace of God, Ro. 9, 11. (2) He learned, by grace, to prize the birthright. (3) He was willing to purchase it with his food, the representative of his life. (4) He was forced into exile, and became a stranger, a pilgrim. (5) He was tried with hard measures by his friends. (6) He was a faithful servant. (7) He was an affectionate husband and parent. (8) He was a bold wrestler in prayer—utterly refusing to resign without a blessing. (9) He was the father of a numerous progeny. (10) He was, in the fulfilment of prophecy, and the designs of Providence, led down into Egypt. (11) He was brought up from it after death—an emblem of deliverance by the resurrection. (12) He rested in the land of promise. C.

Ver. 5. Understood not. Messiah, as prophet, is the speaker, and so speaks, as when he shall say to the wicked, 'I never knew you.' C.

Ver. 10. Ask what you need; make any request consonant with my holy will, and the granting of which will promote your own welfare, and I will liberally respond to every wish, and bestow to the utmost extent of your desire. 'There is not want of our nature—of our bodies or our souls; a want pertaining to this life or the life to come—to ourselves, to our families, to our friends, to the church, or to our country—which God is not able to meet; and there is not a real necessity in any of these respects which he is not willing to meet.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—God's saving relations are a delightful foundation of our warmest praise. Deliverances from God, as well as his authoritative command, oblige us to a punctual observance of his ordinances of worship. And nothing can do it more effectually than our eternal redemption through Christ. How ready is God to help and to save those who call upon him in trouble! And all our obedience is delightfully founded.

oppressed for a while, he will speedily rid them of their persecutors; and often their extremity ushers in their deliverance. Humble prayers for forgiveness, poured forth in sighs and groans, and attended with deep concern for God's dishonour, will not be long unanswered. And deliverances, founded in pardon through Jesus' blood, will animate to cordial praise and thankfulness.

PSALM LXXX. Ver. 1. Leadest Jacob. In the pastoral countries of the East, the flock intrusted to a shepherd is generally under a hundred (see Mat. 18, 12); because it must be sedulously watched, and kept within the view of the shepherd, for fear of the predatory bands by whom these countries are infested. The shepherd accordingly teaches his flock to know his voice, come at his call—he leads them, and they follow his movements, Jo. 10, 27. C.

Ver. 2. Before Ephraim—Joseph's first-born, by divine election; before Benjamin, Joseph's beloved brother; before Manasse, his first-born in point of time, but placed last, by divine appointment, to teach families that the Lord reigneth in all their arrangements. These three tribes marched immediately before the Kohathites who carried the ark, Nu. 2, 17-24; 10, 21-24. C.

Ver. 13. The boar, &c. This is a literal representation of fact at this day in some of the wild districts of the East, especially in Mesopotamia. In the lips of a Jew, the words had a meaning doubly emblematic of the persecutors of the church, as represented not merely by a destructive but an unclean animal. C.

Ver. 17. Man of thy right hand. Let thy hand, anointing him to office and power, by the Holy Ghost, be upon Messiah, the man who is to be exalted to thy right hand—the 'Son of man' who comes to redeem the world. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the mercy that God is the shepherd, leader, and protector of his people—that he is a God reconciled in Christ, to the everlasting wonder of angels and men—and that now it is not the Jewish tribes who marched after the ark in the desert, but multitudes of Gentiles, that see his salvation. Awakened souls ardently desire reconciliation with God, and repeated manifestations of his favour. And if we are turned to God by faith, we cannot fail to inherit his eternal glory. But through seeming rejection of prayers and angry frowns from God, and through tears, griefs, and reproaches, must we sometimes go thither. With what kind care did God settle the Israelites in Canaan and make them flourish there! With how much more did he gather, fount, and increase his gospel church! But, alas! the misery and ruin that sin draws down, upon the best-constituted churches and nations. Enemies, furious as wild beasts, waste them when God withdraws his protection. Yet the design hereof is not his people's ruin; but to excite their prayers, quicken their repentance, and magnify the wonders of his power and grace in their deliverance. It is impossible for his church to be ruined when her help is laid on her almighty Redeemer, the man of God's right hand. God's love for us is the source of all our salvation, quickening, and blessedness of grace. Through him strengthening us, we can do all things. No wonder then, that prayer is the daily employment of such as are spiritually alive; and that a sense of God's favour is more earnestly desired than the removal of any affliction.

God invoked to judge the earth.

PSALM LXXXIV.

A prayer against the oppressors.

thee out of the land of Egypt: ¹open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

11 But^a my people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me.⁹

12 So⁴ I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust;¹ and they walked in their own counsels.

13 Oh^a that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways!

14 I should soon have subdued^a their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries.

15 The haters of the LORD should have submitted themselves² unto him: ²but their time³ should have endured for ever.

PSALM LXXXIII.

¹ A complaint to God of the enemies' conspiracies. 9 A prayer against them that oppress the church.

A song or psalm of Asaph.¹

KEEP not^a thou silence, O God: hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God.

on his gospel grant of himself to us as OUR GOD. His service must then be our highest interest as well as duty. Past obligations are sufficient to engage our hearts, even though we had no future promises in view. And when God grants himself and his fulness, our desires or prayers for enjoyment can never be too much enlarged. They only who have him for their portion have all that heart can wish. But how terrible is the punishment of a wilful refusal of his gracious offers! What loss of victory over enemies, of perpetuated enjoyments, and of delightful provision! Alas! what enemies are sinners to their own souls! And they who resist God's Word and Spirit have only their own wilfulness to blame when their destruction comes. Their perishing is not through want of compassion in God, but through the hardness and impenitence of their own hearts.

REFLECTIONS.—To quicken his people's opportunity in prayer the Lord sometimes appears for a time to disregard their distress. Whatever pretences men make for their opposition to God's people, the real cause is their enmity against God himself, whose holiness they cannot endure, and whose image they cannot but hate. But while saints are hid with Christ in God, no enemy can really hurt them. Wicked men, though

PSALM LXXXVI.

1 David implores God's aid because of his need and religious faith, 5 and of the power and goodness of God. 11 He prayeth for grace, and promiseth praise for past mercies. 14 Complaining of the proud, he craveth some token of God's favour.

A prayer of David.

BOW down² thine ear, O LORD, hear me: for I¹ am poor and needy.

2 Preserve³ my soul; for I am holy:² O thou my God, save thy servant that trusteth in thee.

3 Be merciful unto me, O LORD: for I cry unto thee daily.³

4 Rejoice⁴ the soul of thy servant: for unto thee, O LORD, do I lift up my soul.

diversified by nations, humours, or interests, strongly unite in opposing the cause of God and truth. Glad would they be if neither preacher nor professor of the true religion were left upon earth. But though craft be employed to seduce, threatenings to intimidate, and fury to extirpate, the foundation of God standeth sure. God knoweth them that believe, and they shall never be moved. At the worst they have their all-sufficient Lord to flee to, who can check the madness of the devourers. And past interpositions of God in favour of his people should encourage us to plead and hope for the like mercy. All opposition to God and his church is but rushing headlong into certain ruin. Even in this life, sinners' terrors of mind often make their life a burden, and are a presage of more dreadful misery in hell for ever. Men must know at last that the Lord omnipotent reigneth; and the execution of deserved judgment on the ungodly but shows the tendency of sin. Meanwhile we ought to long for the conviction and conversion of our bitterest enemies of mankind, rather than their destruction.

PSALM LXXXIV. Ver. 3. Even is not in the Hebrew. The words between yea and young should rather be taken as a parenthesis, and the meaning stands thus—'My heart cries out for the living God, for thine altars, O Lord of hosts, &c.' That birds could not build in the altars, is evident both from their construction and constant use; nor can altars be put for courts, for they are already mentioned. The longing of the psalmist is for the altar of sacrifice, the one great sacrifice that perfects for ever them that are sanctified. He. 10: 12, 14. C.—'The idea here is, that the sparrows and the swallows seemed to have a happy lot; to be in a condition to be envied. Even they might come freely to the place where God was worshipped—to the very altars—and make their home there undisturbed. How strangely in contrast with this was the condition of the wandering—the exiled—author of the psalm!' (Barnes). P.

Ver. 6. Baca. Not any particular place; for the people, in ascending to the festivals, could not all pass through any one valley. It signifies, 'valley of weeping,' the emblem of the life of 'the Man of Sorrows,' in the fellowship of whose sufferings every pilgrim of Zion must partake, Phil. 3: 10. C.

Ver. 5-7. The meaning of this difficult passage is probably this:—'Blessed is the man whose strength (or trust) is in thee, whose heart rejoiceth at the prospect of following the way to thy house. Even when passing through the vale of misery—through sorrow and suffering and persecution—make it as a well (or fountain of delight), and the early rain falleth upon it, and covereth it with verdure. They go from strength, and at length appear before God perfect in Zion. P.—Every one of them in Zion appeareth before God. 'The God of gods will appear to them.' (Williams). C.

Ver. 8. Give ear, O God of Jacob. See note on Ps. 81: 1. Christ here personally intercedes for the church, and him 'the Father heareth always,' Jn. 11: 42. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What inexpressible beauty gracious souls see in holiness and in holy work! Fellowship with God in Christ, in his ordinances, is the delight, the desire of their soul. The meanest abode, with his presence and ordinances, is preferred to a palace without them. Not only faithful ministers who attend to their work, but all who study a life of close fellowship with God, and faithful service of him, increase their joy in the Lord and their strength for his work. If our heart be once engaged we can walk with pleasure in God's ways, and in attending his solemn ordinances. However troublesome the way to heaven be, not one of those who truly set out need faint or miscarry. And O the inexpressible glories they there enjoy in the immediate vision and presence of God! If he be our own and our father's God we shall never seek him in vain. If he be our shield we shall be safe from fear of evil. If our confidence towards him be founded solely on the merit and intercession of Jesus his Anointed, he cannot but behold us in mercy and love. Infinitely preferable is fellowship with God in his ordinances, to all the pleasures of sin or sense that can be enjoyed on earth: and happy are those who have God ALL IN ALL to them, bestowing ALL on them; and who, in all cases, depend for ALL they need only upon him.

PSALM LXXXV. Ver. 2. This psalm must be descriptive of the times and sacrifice of Messiah; for at no other period did God 'cover all the sin' of his church. See Ro. 4: 7, 23-25. C.

Ver. 5. The believing remnant of the Jews here intercede for their unbelieving 'brethren, their kinsmen according to the flesh,' during the long dispersion that has succeeded the crucifixion of our Lord. C.

Ver. 11. Under a broken law there is no righteousness, except the finished work of Christ, in which all holy commandment was fulfilled, and the penalty of death endured. Righteousness looked down from heaven when Christ ascended, and 'through the eternal Spirit presented himself without spot before God.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Present distress should never obliterate the grateful memory of God's past favours. His pardons of sin, through active faith, are all free, full, and everlasting; and when guilt is removed wrath ceases of course. Though our unfaithfulness may have plunged us into distress, God is rich in mercy and ready to turn us to himself. But no salvation can be hoped for while we continue indulging our sins. And unless he save us freely, through faith in Christ, we are undone forever. Impenitent sinners must undergo eternal pain; but earnest believers are only corrected for a time. Having experienced the power of his quickening and restoring grace, they rejoice in God their Saviour, and speak, to his glory, of the wonders of his grace. And having expected and obtained an answer to their prayers, the peace which God speaks in his promise withdraws their heart from sinning. But how sure was the promise, near the fulfilment, and great the glory of Jesus' incarnation and office! Herein the mercy, faithfulness, and equity of God appear harmoniously and brightly displayed. While Jesus, the truth, grows upward from earth, his righteous Father

5 For¹ thou, LORD, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

6 Give² ear, O LORD, unto my prayer; and attend to the voice of my supplications.

9 All⁵ nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O LORD; and shall glorify thy name.

10 For⁶ thou art great, and doest wondrous things: ⁷thou art God alone.⁵

from heaven beholds him with pleasure. While the gospel and its influences take place among men, JEHOVAH manifests his righteousness in pardoning and blessing us with all spiritual blessings in Christ; in making us to abound in fruits of righteousness to the praise of his glory; and in directing us to Jesus and his law and example, that we may be led into the paths of everlasting peace.

PSALM LXXXVI. Ver. 2. I am holy. 'Thy favoured one' (Mudge). 'Thy gracious saint' (Ainsworth). But, however it may be translated, the confident assertion of the purity of his personal character, proves the speaker either to be a self-deceiving Pharisee, sporting a righteousness he did not possess, or 'Jesus Christ the righteous,' the Holy One of Israel. The former he could not be, the latter therefore he must be. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here behold Jesus as the holy but sacrificial servant of his Father, exploring his favours and triumphing in his praise, let me, in every case, pour forth importunate prayers; place all my confidence in God; lodge all my complaints and requests with him; and ascribe to him the glory of his own perfections, and of all my own and the people's deliverances.

PSALM LXXXVII. Ver. 1. The chief object of this psalm is to show the advantages of religious ordinances and religious training. Especially the psalmist illustrates the great benefit of having been born and educated in the holy city, where God is honoured, and where the enlightening, restraining, and quickening influences of his worship are felt. P.—The Lord's foundation is Christ, 1 Co. 3, 10, upon whom are builded, first apostles and prophets, then the whole church, Ep. 2, 20; and this foundation rests upon the mountains, the high raised strength of the Redeemer's holiness, ver. 2. See Ps. 78, 68. C.

Ver. 4. I will mention Egypt, Ps. 89, 10; Is. 57, 9, 10, whom I judged with many plagues, and whence I delivered my people at the first; and Babylon, which I have doomed to extirpation, because she led Zion captive. Behold, also, Philistia, whose persevering enmity I have foiled and punished; Tyre, that once great city, which I have left a desolate rock—with the whole land of Ethiopia (Cush), which I have swept with successive judgments—and all this I have done for my Zion's sake. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how firmly and publicly our gospel church is founded upon Jesus Christ the Rock

PSALM LXXXVIII.

A prayer containing a grievous complaint.

A song or psalm for¹ the sons of Korah, to the chief musician upon Mahalath Leannoth, Maschil of ²Heman the Ezrahite.²

LORD³ God of my salvation, ⁴I have cried day and night before thee.³

2 Let⁴ my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For⁵ my soul is full of troubles; and my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 I⁶ am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no strength.⁴

5 Free⁷ among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave,⁵ whom thou rememberest no more: and they are cut off from thy hand.⁶

6 Thou⁸ hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps.

7 Thy ⁹wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Selah.⁷

8 Thou¹⁰ hast put away mine acquaintance far from me; thou hast made me an abomination⁸ unto them: I ¹¹am shut up, and I cannot come forth.

9 Mine¹² eye mourneth by reason of affliction: LORD, I have called daily upon thee; ¹⁰I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

10 Wilt¹³ thou show wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah.

of ages! And how JEHOVAH delights in fellowship with his people in the public and private ordinances of his grace. Glorious things are spoken of her foundation, her ordinances, her members, her properties, her fulness. And under the influence of almighty grace the heathen nations on every side crowd into her. Behold also the exact and kind care which God takes of every true member! And great spiritual joy and rejoicing, and fresh springs of salvation, are found in her by the saints.

PSALM LXXXVIII. Ver. 7. Thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Surely in the lips of any but Messiah, upon whom 'the Lord laid the iniquities of us all,' these words would be nothing but selfish exaggeration; while in the lips of Messiah they are literally true, and are therefore to be absolutely interpreted of him alone. REFLECTIONS.—How inexpressibly grievous are the afflictions of some of God's loving children! nay, of his Son! Their sorrows are enlarged. They are reduced to the very brink of despair; load—and thy righteousness in the 'land of forgetfulness?

13 But¹ unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning² shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, 'why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me?¹

15 I¹ am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while¹ I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

16 Thy¹ fierce wrath² goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off.

17 They¹ came round about me daily³ like water; they compassed me about together.

18 Lover¹ and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness.

PSALM LXXXIX.

1 The psalmist praiseth God for his covenant, 5 for his wonderful power, 15 for the care of his people, 19 for his favour to the kingdom of David. 38 Then complaining of contrary events, 46 he expostulateth, prayeth, and blesteth God.

Maschil of 'Ethan the Ezrahite.¹

I WILL¹ sing of the mercies of the LORD for ever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness² to all generations.³

2 For I have said, 'Mercy shall be built up for ever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens.

3 I¹ have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto 'David my servant,

4 Thy¹ seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Selah.⁴

5 And¹ the heavens shall praise thy wonders, O LORD: thy faithfulness also in the congregation of the saints.

6 For 'who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD? who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD?

7 God¹ is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him.

8 O LORD God of 'hosts, 'who is a strong LORD like unto thee? or to thy faithfulness round about thee?

9 Thou¹ rulest the raging of the sea: when the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them.

10 Thou¹ hast broken 'Rahab² in pieces, as one that is slain; thou hast scattered thine enemies with thy strong arm.³

11 The¹ heavens are thine, the earth also is thine: as for the world, and the fulness thereof, thou hast founded them.

12 The¹ north and the south thou hast

1 The main object of this psalm is to declare the promises made to David regarding the perpetuity of his throne and kingdom. The promise had a double reference—typical and real. David's line and throne and kingdom were to continue until, in the person and work and reign of our Lord, David's great Son, the typical merged into the real—the temporal into the spiritual.—P.

STAIRWAY TO TOWER OF CASTLE—NEAR THE PLACE WHERE CHRIST WAS TRANSFIGURED. [Psalms, lxxxix:12.]—"The North and the South thou hast created them: Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name." This is a view of the stairway to the tower of Subeibeh castle. It stands three miles from Caesarea Philippi, and about one thousand feet higher than this town. It is in sight of Mount Hermon, where the Lord Jesus Christ was transfigured in the presence of Peter, James and John. We are looking toward the North. This castle figured largely in the wars of the Saracenes of Damascus against the Templars of Jerusalem. As it commands the passage from the Huleh to the plains of the Jordan over Hermon to Damascus and the East, it must have been a place of importance at least during those troublous times when such passes were dominated by a frowning castle.

34 My^a covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips.

35 Once^a have I sworn^a by my holiness that I will not lie^a unto David.⁵

36 His^a seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me.⁶

37 It^a shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

38 But^a thou hast cast off and abhorred; thou hast been wroth with thine anointed.⁷

39 Thou^a hast made void the covenant of thy servant; thou hast profaned his crown, by casting it to the ground.

40 Thou^a hast broken down all his hedges; thou hast brought his strong holds to ruin.

41 All^a that pass by the way spoil him: he is a reproach to his neighbours.

42 Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries; thou hast made all his enemies to rejoice.

43 Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword, and hast not made him to stand in the battle.

44 Thou^a hast made his glory⁸ to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground.

45 The^a days of his youth hast thou shortened; thou hast covered him with shame. Selah.

46 How^a long, LORD? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? shall thy wrath burn like fire?

47 Remember^a how short my time is: wherefore hast thou made all men in vain?

48 What^a man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? Selah.

PSALM XC.

1 The psalmist declareth God's providence over Israel, 3 complaineth of human frailty, 7 divine chastisements, 10 and brevity of life. 12 He prayeth for the knowledge and sensible experience of God's good providence.

A prayer of Moses¹ the ^aman of God.

LORD, thou hast been our ^adwelling-place^a in all generations.³

2 Before^a the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, ^aeven from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.

3 Thou^a turnest man to destruction; and sayest, Return, ye children of men.

4 For^a a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past,⁴ and as a watch in the night.

5 Thou^a carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which groweth ^aup.⁶

6 In^a the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth.

7 For^a we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.

8 Thou^a hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

9 For all our days are passed away⁷ in ^athy wrath: we spend our years as a ^atale⁹ that is told.

10 The days of our years are threescore years and ten;¹ and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years,² yet is their strength labour and sorrow: for ^ait is soon cut off, and we fly away.

and earth by the rolling tides; measuring out the months of the life of man, and the returns of God's solemn festivals; and 'ruling the night,' as a 'faithful witness in heaven,' that though the sun be withdrawn for a time, his beams are not extinguished. In all which respects, the moon is a beautiful emblem of the covenant grace of God.

STATIONS OF THE CROSS IN THE GARDEN. [Psalms, lxxxix:45.]—"The days of his youth hast thou shortened: thou hast covered him with shame." The Greek church, or the Eastern church, has placed within the Garden of Gethsemane little stations which represent the incidents of the crucifixion. Poor pilgrims from all parts of the world upon visiting Jerusalem make the rounds of these stations of the Cross, praying at each. One cannot stand in the Garden of Gethsemane during the Greek Easter week without having a new apprehension of the hold the Lord Jesus Christ has upon the hearts of the human race. To see people kissing the wood of which the stations representing the incidents of the crucifixion are built; to see them kissing the rocks made dear to their hearts because lying upon the ground over which the Lord Jesus Christ walked, is sufficient to bring tears to the eyes of the hardest heart.

11 Who^r knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, *so is thy wrath.*²

12 So^r teach us to number our days, that we may apply³ our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return,⁴ O LORD, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.⁴

14 O^r satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let^r thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 And^r let the beauty of the LORD our God be upon us: and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.⁵

PSALM XCI.

1 The state of the godly. 3 Their safety. 9 Their habitation. 11 Their servants. 14 Their friend; with the effects of them all.

HE that^a dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide¹ under the shadow of the Almighty.²

2 I will say of the LORD, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust.

3 Surely^a he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 He^r shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

5 Thou^a shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day.

7 A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only^a with thine eyes shalt thou behold, and see the reward of the wicked.

9 Because thou hast made the LORD which is thy refuge, even the most High, thy habitation; their conscience, and enable them to rejoice in himself. And such as are faithful to Christ will be greatly concerned that he may work all in them, do all for them, give all to them; and that he may herein be glorified, not only in them, but also in their posterity after them.

PSALM XCI. Ver. 1. Secret place. In the bosom of the Father, where the Son was in glory 'before the foundation of the world'—our only conception of eternity (see Jn. 1. 18; and 17. 5; 1 Jn. 1. 2); for he that was before creation was, must have been eternal. C.

Ver. 2. I will say. That the speaker is Christ, his own tacit acknowledgment (Mat. 4. 6, compared with ver. 11, 12) undeniably demonstrates. The amended translation of Lowth, instead of 'I will say,' gives 'who saith,' which seems more natural. C.

Ver. 4. The wings and feathers which God adopted in the emblematic cherubim that overshadowed the mercy-seat—which, again, was the emblem of Jesus, the propitiation or mercy-seat for our sins. C.

Ver. 9. The Lord which is my refuge. By supplying the words which is, the sense is obscured. 'The Lord my refuge,' like 'the Lord our righteousness,' should be taken as a title of Jehovah, appropriating the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, as his refuge; and, through him, the refuge of every believer in his name. C.

Ver. 11. Satan quoted this text correctly, so far as he went; and, so far, our Lord acknowledged the interpretation. But yet he quoted falsely, because he quoted imperfectly, and misrepresented the truth, as he suppressed an essential part. And so, in all ages, have all his servants dealt. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here contemplate Jesus Christ as the Father's Son, protecting, guarded, attended, heard in his prayers, honoured, and crowned with life and glory everlasting, let me with wonder behold the happiness of all people who make God their refuge and delightful habitation, who know his name, set their love on him, and call on him. Secured against every disappointment and danger, distinguished in the providence of God, guarded by angels, delivered from and victorious over the devil, that fowler, dragon, and lion of hell, JEHOVAH attends them in their troubles, hears their prayers, and gives them answers of peace. He exalts them on Christ their Rock, and makes them to sit with him on his throne; honours them with the relations of children, kings, and priests unto God, and decks them with blessed righteousness and imparted grace. And after preserving all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, he bestows upon them his unutterable blessedness above. May these things in Christ be the desire of my heart.

PSALM XCII. Ver. 3. Of the several musical instruments here enumerated, there is little, if any, certain knowledge. Nor is their specific nature important; as the object of the speaker is merely to show, that all instruments of music should be dedicated to the praise of God—to show forth his 'loving-kindness' in the morning; because he has preserved his children while they slept—and his 'faithfulness every night,' because he has given them 'bread' through the day. C.

commemorated, is that to which praise is ascribed under the NAME of God (ver. 1), consequently the whole work of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit;

the Son addresses the Father, triumphing in 10 There^a shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

11 For^r he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

12 They^r shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

13 Thou^r shalt tread upon the lion and adder:³ the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

14 Because^r he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high,⁴ because he hath known my name.⁵

15 He^r shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honour him.

16 With^r long life⁶ will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation.

PSALM XCII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God, 4 for his great works, 6 for his judgments on the wicked, 10 and for his goodness to the godly.

A psalm or song for the sabbath-day.

IT is^a a good thing to give thanks unto the LORD, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High:

2 To^b show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night,¹

3 Upon^c an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery; ²upon the harp with a solemn sound.³

4 For thou, LORD, hast made me glad through thy work:⁴ I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5 O LORD, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

6 A^a brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this.

7 When^d the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever:

8 But thou, LORD, art most high for evermore.

9 For, lo, thine enemies, O LORD, for, lo, thine enemies shall perish; all the workers of iniquity shall be scattered.

cedar—great and incorruptible. These characters meet in one, but are from him transfused to many. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whatever our engagements be, we are bound at least to begin and end every day with prayer and praise. And they who have lively experience of God's love and faithfulness, will delight in daily showing forth his salvation. None but such as are ignorant or wicked will disregard his work of creation or providence; and much less that of redemption—but short-lived is the flourishing of wicked men, and dreadful the misery in which it issues; and yet this misery is the legitimate outcome of sin against God! But pleasant and profitable to themselves and others, and honourable to God, shall be the spiritual growth of those who are planted in Christ, and live in continued fellowship with him.

PSALM XCIII. Ver. 1. The Lord reigneth. The prophetic period to which this and some parallel psalms refer can be easily ascertained from comparing them with Re. 11. 17; 19. 6; at which time God shall 'take to him his mighty power and reign,' and when all the things that are now temporary and movable shall pass under that 'kingdom that cannot be moved,' He. 12. 28. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Solid and believing views of Jesus Christ are excellent means to subdue the pride and remove the fear of man. They who have him for their king and keeper have no reason to be moved from their steadfastness. No earthly dishonours need 10 But^a my horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn:⁵ I shall be anointed with fresh oil.

11 Mine^a eye also shall see my desire on mine enemies; and mine ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me.⁶

12 The^a righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

13 Those that be planted⁷ in the house of the LORD shall flourish in the courts of our God.

14 They^a shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing.⁸

15 To show that the LORD is upright; he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

PSALM XCIII.

The majesty, stability, power, and holiness of Christ's kingdom.

THE LORD^a reigneth, he is clothed with majesty; the LORD is clothed with strength, wherewith he hath girded himself: the world also is stablished, that it cannot be moved.

2 Thy^a throne is established of old:¹ thou art^a from everlasting.

3 The^a floods have lifted up, O LORD, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves.

4 The^a LORD on high is mightier than the noise of many waters,² yea, than the mighty waves of the sea.

5 Thy^a testimonies are very sure: holiness becometh thine house, O LORD, for ever.³

PSALM XCIV.

1 The psalmist, calling for justice, complaineth of tyranny and impiety. 8 He sheweth God's providence; 12 and teacheth the blessedness of affliction. 16 God is the defender of the afflicted.

O LORD God, to whom vengeance belongeth;¹ O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, show thyself.²

2 Lift^a up thyself, thou Judge of the earth: render^a a reward to the proud.³

3 LORD, how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?

4 How long shall they utter and speak hard things? and all the workers of iniquity boast themselves?

5 They^a break in pieces thy people, O LORD, and afflict thine heritage:

6 They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless:

should rather be taken literally.
For while some songs concerning the 'old things' were old, and are ready, like clouds, to 'vanish away,' other songs are concerning the God shall yet create, and, like the sun, are daily renewed, never 'wax old,' and can never be changed.

ment of worship by many churches sadly neglected, or most imperfectly attempted—and a duty and privilege to which many professing Christians consider themselves in no wise obligated. In addition, however, to this, and similar calls of the Spirit, the example of Christ on earth, and of saints in heaven, demands the universal voice of the church to engage in the praises of Jehovah. C.

Ver. 3. The heathen worshipped false gods; the Jews also were addicted to idolatry. One great object of this noble song of praise is to celebrate the praises of the one only exalted God of heaven and earth. He is called by his peculiar and incommunicable name JEHOVAH. By it he made himself known to Moses and the whole Jewish nation. By it he was distinguished from all false deities. Hence in this verse the psalmist says:—'For JEHOVAH is a great God, and a great King over all gods.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—God richly deserves our highest and most cordial praise. And we should invite one another to this blessed employ. How great is he, possessed of every necessary, infinite, and eternal excellency! How glorious his formation of all things, and his extensive dominion over them! How delightful and effective of blessings unnumbered is his new-covenant relation to men!—But if he be our Saviour and King, it is proper, it is necessary, that we be obedient subjects. To none but such is he the author of eternal salvation. To-day, without a moment's delay, we ought to hear his voice in the gospel, and to receive the offers of his grace. However slightly men pass over their sins, they are highly provoking in God's sight. And disbelief of his promises is one of the greatest insults that we can put upon him. That heart is hardened indeed whom the great and precious promises of the gospel cannot effect. Let us take warning by the ruin of others, that we fall not after the same example of unbelief. Though God bear long with us, he will not bear always. The mercies which we have received from him, as well as the wilfulness of our ignorance and our love to our errors, will fearfully aggravate our sin. And dreadful will be our case, if because of our sins he once exclude us from his new kingdom, his celestial rest, on account of our despising it when offered to us in the gospel.

PSALM XCVI. REFLECTIONS.—Since to us Gentiles Jesus Christ and his word of salvation are now come, let us, in songs ever fresh, ever cordial, publish the glories of his grace, and the wonders of his redeeming mercy, power, holiness, and majesty. Let us acknowledge him as our saving Lord, present ourselves to him as living sacrifices, and in the pure ordinances of his grace worship him with pure hearts and in a reverent and holy manner. Let us rejoice that his kingdom has been, is, and will be established among the Gentiles on earth. Let us, with joy, hope for these latter days, in which Satan shall be bound, and all the kingdoms on earth subjected to the righteous and merciful government of our Redeemer. And let us, with more exalted joy, expect his coming in the clouds, with power and great glory, to judge, and finally decide the eternal state of men and angels.

PSALM XCVII. Ver. 2. Clouds and darkness are the emblems of both his government of providence and plan of redemption, which are yet veiled from our eyes—in some parts by clouds, through which we see obscurely; and in others by darkness, through which we cannot see at all. C.

Ver. 7. Confounded. This is not any angry imprecation, but a humble prayer that God would confound the counsels of idolaters against truth and godliness, as he confounded the counsel of Ahithophel against David—that he would confound their combinations to do evil in the world, as he confounded the tongues of the Babel conspirators, and scattered them abroad upon the face of the whole earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—However mysterious and unsearchable God's providences be, they are always just and equal. A great shaking of the nations, by the Roman and other conquests, ushered in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. A great destruction of obstinate Jews and heathens, and overturning of idolatry in the world, attended the erection and spread of it. And a great overturning of antichristians, Mahometans, and all their false worship, shall yet take place in its most glorious period. No exalted potentates, no mighty nations, nor fixed customs of wickedness, shall be able to withstand his conquering influence. Let saints then rejoice in his dignity of person, office, and state; in his gracious preservation and deliverance of his people; in the comforts and glory which he has prepared for them; and in his righteous judgments upon their implacable foes. And let their delight in his holiness inflame their love to himself and their hatred of sin.

PSALM XCVIII. Ver. 3. Ends—countries of the world, evidently carrying forward to the period foretold by our Lord, Mat. 24. 14. C.

Ver. 6. See note on Ps. 92. 3. But these instruments are now, almost without exception, dedicated to military pomp, theatrical spectacles, bacchanalian revellings, and worldly amusements; and, married to a sensual and degrading poetry, whereby they become the great auxiliaries of the world against God—and are by many held inconsistent with the simplicity and purity of Christian worship. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I review these lotty notes,

PRISON, NAPLES. [Psalms, xcvi:10.]—"Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth; the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved; he shall judge the people righteously." Perhaps there is no city on earth that furnishes a better point for the study of the judgments of God upon cities, nations, and individuals, than Naples. In no other city that has ever existed, have men gone further in defiance of the laws of God and man, and in no other city have they suffered more.

Here, in the time of Rome's power and glory, her wealthy people reveled in vices too horrible to mention. And here the judgments of heaven have fallen with a fury and an emphasis almost without parallel. This region, so amply favored as one might be led to suppose it dropped from heaven, as the poet says, has done more to insult heaven than almost any other spot. But Naples has been judged, and here the Lord reigns, either to build those who obey or to destroy those who violate His law.

8 Zion¹ heard, and was glad; and the daughters of Judah rejoiced because of thy judgments, O LORD.

PSALM XCVIII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the Jews, 4 the Gentiles, 7 and all the creatures to praise God.

A psalm.

SING unto the LORD a new song;¹ for he hath done marvellous things: his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory.

2 The LORD hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly showed² in the sight of the heathen.

3 He⁴ hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel: all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God.³

4 Make⁵ a joyful noise unto the LORD, all the earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praise.

5 Sing⁶ unto the LORD with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.

6 With trumpets and sound of cornet make a joyful noise before the LORD, the King.

8 Let the floods clap their hands; let the hills be joyful together

Because Ps. xcix. addressed a people who loved the Lord (ver. 10), a people made righteous by faith in a Saviour; but Ps. xcix. addresses a people who had sought out many inventions, ver. 8, upon which, even a God of mercy takes, for the correction and ensample of others, severe and righteous judgment. 5 Angels, He. 1. 6.
6 More literally: "Let all those that serve graven images, that make boast of their idols, be ashamed."—Worship him all ye eilohim. Eilohim is one of the names given in Scripture to God. It signifies power; and the same word was applied to all those who exercised, or were supposed to possess power, such as angels, magistrates, princes, and false deities. That the word is intended in this place to signify angels, is proved by the quotation of the apostle in He. 1. 6.—^f Ps. 48. 11; 64. 9; 81. 10; 82. 6. ^g Re. 11. 17; 12. 12; 18. 20; 19. 7. ^h Phil. 2. 9–11. ⁱ Ep. 1. 21. ^j Ps. 95. 3; 96. 4.

This psalm was, in all probability, composed to celebrate the dedication of the second temple. It was thus emphatically "a new song"—a song in which the grateful nation expressed anew praise & thanks to Jehovah for restoring them to their fatherland, and giving them another temple. the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way,⁴ he shall serve me.

7 He^a that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight.⁵

8 I^b will early destroy all the wicked of the land;⁶ that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the LORD.

PSALM CII.

1 The prophet in his prayer maketh a grievous complaint. 12 He taketh comfort in the eternity and mercy of God. 18 The mercies of God are worthy to be recorded. 23 The prophet, sensible of his own weakness, resteth his hope on the unchangeable nature of God.

A prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the LORD.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, and let my cry come unto thee.²

2 Hide^a not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; incline thine ear unto me: in the day when I call, answer me speedily.

3 For^a my days are consumed like smoke,³ and my bones are burnt as an hearth.

4 My^a heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread.

5 By^a reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin.⁴

6 I^a am like a pelican of the wilderness: I am like an owl of the desert.

7 I^a watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house-top.

8 Mine^a enemies reproach me all the day; and they that are against me are sworn against me.

9 For^a I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled^a my drink with weeping,⁵

10 Because^a of thine indignation and thy wrath: for thou hast lifted me up, and cast me down.

11 My^a days are like a shadow that declineth; and I am withered like grass.

12 But thou, O LORD, shalt endure for ever; and thy remembrance unto all generations.

But he will make the dearest of them to smart severely for their sin in this life, notwithstanding they may triumph through faith. Great praise is due to God for his mercies. And deep awe and inward purity are necessary in worshipping him that is infinitely holy.

PSALM C. Ver. 1. That this summons is not confined to the land of Judea is obvious from ver. 4, in which the parties called are exhorted to enter Jehovah's courts. For, whereas the temple had within the gates an outward court, into which the Gentiles might freely enter—the converted Gentiles must here be united as God's sheep and people with the believing Jews. See Jn. 10. 16. Is. 56. 7.

REFLECTIONS.—What joyful praise, what grateful thanksgiving, what cheerful and hearty service do we Gentiles owe to the Lord!—to him who is JEHOVAH, the infinite ALL!—to him who forms us both in nature and in grace!—to him who is our high proprietor and redeemer, our kind shepherd, leader, provider, and provision!—to him who is good in himself, and whose mercy and truth are for ever exerted in the fulfilment of gracious and ever-blessed promises to sinful men!

PSALM CI. Ver. 2. In a perfect way. . . with a perfect heart. Surely he that so resolves, if he do it not in self-ignorance, as Peter resolved never to forsake his Master, must be the Christ. C.—This is a noble resolution, well worthy of the man after God's own heart. Wisdom, divine wisdom, should guide him in everything. His principles and motives would be wise; his conduct and acts in all the relations of life, private as well as public, would be regulated by wisdom; his words and his very thoughts would be wise; his companions and friends would be selected wisely. In the verses which follow, the psalmist shows how he was resolved to carry out his noble resolution. What a lesson does this psalm teach us! P.

REFLECTIONS.—The lot of saints on earth is a strange mixture of mercies and judgments. But all of them, taken in their connection and tendency, are to be improved as matter of praise and thanksgiving. Fellowship with and influences from God must strengthen and animate us to every holy practice. Serious godliness is the most substantial wisdom; and to act for God in the religious management of families, kingdoms, or in other relative stations, is a noted branch of it. With the utmost care ought men, by whatever power they have, to discourage everything wicked, and to encourage everything virtuous and holy. But it is in vain to attempt instructing or reforming others if we do not set them an example in our own practice.

PSALM CII. Ver. 6, 7. What three birds are specifically intended it is impossible with certainty to say: two of them are, however, inhabitants of the deserts, far from the haunts of men; and one, though the inhabitant of cities, a solitary watcher on house-tops. The different habits of these birds formed admirable emblems of that solitary state into which our Lord was often forced in order to elude the watchful and incessant malice of his enemies. C.

Ver. 12. This address exactly corresponds with its continuation in ver. 25; and as there is apostolic authority for considering ver. 25 to be words of the Father to the Son, there can be no doubt that ver. 12 is the address of the Father likewise. C.

Ver. 13. Would not history rather prove that the time to punish Zion had come at the period of our Lord's prayer of distress? Not so. 'Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' And though her salvation seem to linger in the eye of sense, it was then secured to the heart of faith; and all that now grows in the field of promise, shall be reaped in the harvest of vision. C.

Ver. 23. In this, and the first clause of ver. 24, the Son, in the days of his flesh, resumes his address to the Father. The reply of the Father, as quoted by the apostle, He. 1. 10, is one amongst the many and overwhelming evidences of the Godhead of the Son. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, Ge. 1. 1. But the Father being witness, the Son created the heavens and the earth; therefore—hear it, ye gainsayers, and be silent for ever!—therefore the Son is God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To what low condition God reduces his church and people for the exercise and trial of their grace, and for exciting their more importunate prayers. In darkness, vexation, and trouble, their days often post toward an end. Afflicted, dispirited, and pained in their heart, and their body wasted to skin and bones, like owls and pelicans, they shun converse and comfort, and pine away in melancholy solitude. Often, like lonely sparrows, they are debared from rest and sleep, and are deserted by friends, or avoid their company: are exposed to the reproach and fury of inveterate enemies—oppressed with grief—overwhelmed with a sense of God's indignation, in his sudden and awful changing of their comforts into depths of misery, till near the grave, and apparently near the pit! But great is the mercy that they have, notwithstanding, a God, a hearer of prayer, to whom they may complain; and a heart to pour out before him. Be the afflictions of the righteous as numerous as they will, the eternal Saviour has, and does, and will deliver them out of 23 Man^s goeth forth unto his work and to his labour until the evening.

24 O LORD, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches:

25 So is this great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts.

26 Thereⁿ go the ships:⁶ there is that^s leviathan, whom thou hast made⁷ to play therein.

27 These^p wait all upon thee; that thou mayest give them their meat in due season.

28 That thou givest them they gather: thou openest thine hand, they are filled with good.

29 Thou^a hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou^r takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust.

30 Thou^s sendest forth thy spirit, they are created: and thou^r renewest the face of the earth.⁸

31 The^s glory of the LORD shall endure⁹ for ever; the LORD shall rejoice in his works.

32 He^s looketh on the earth, and it trembleth; he toucheth the hills, and they smoke.

33 I^v will sing unto the LORD as long as I live; I will sing praise to my God while I have my being.¹

34 My^s meditation of him shall be sweet; I will be glad in the LORD.

35 Let^a the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more.² Bless thou the LORD, O my soul. Praise ye the LORD.³

have any among them who, by their prayers and their zeal, stand in the gap, and avert the Lord's indignation. With pleasure he looks upon such, and highly honours them, on that account. But infinite is the goodness of our God, who, when provoked to add one stroke to another, and to make wicked tempters to sin cruel tormentors for it, is so ready to step in for our relief, and to rebuke, or even turn the hearts of them that destroyed us. Never is a penitent prayer poured out into his bosom but it returns in gracious preservation and deliverance. Let then all our troubles drive us to the throne of grace; and all our mercies, bestowed 16 They¹ envied Moses also in the camp, and Aaron the saint of the LORD.

17 The² earth opened and swallowed up Dathan, and covered the company of Abiram.

18 And³ a fire was kindled in their company; the flame burnt up the wicked.

19 They⁴ made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image.⁹

21 They⁶ forgot God¹ their saviour, which had done "great things in Egypt;

22 Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red sea.

23 Therefore⁷ he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them.

24 Yea, "they despised the pleasant land;² they⁴ believed not his word;

25 But⁸ murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD:

26 Therefore⁹ he "lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness:

27 To overthrow³ their seed also among the nations, and to "scatter them in the lands.

28 They¹ joined themselves also unto Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead.⁴

29 Thus¹ they provoked him to anger with their inventions; and the "plague brake in upon them.

30 Then² stood up Phinehas, and executed judgment; and so "the plague was stayed:

31 And that was "counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore.

32 They¹ angered him also at the waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes:

33 Because they provoked his spirit, so that he "spake unadvisedly with his lips.⁵

If the forgetfulness of spirit here charged upon Israel appear strange or incredible to any one, let him only look at the world around him, and in all ranks and conditions of men he will discover examples of a forgetfulness of baptism and the Lord's Supper, and all their holy obligations and privileges, not only as glaring as those of Israel in the desert, but many times more strange and criminal, because of the greater light of the knowledge of God which now shines in the face of Jesus Christ—of Christ, not in types and shadows, but visibly set forth as crucified amongst us.—C.

 17 The Israelites sinned grievously in thus provoking Moses; but Moses himself was not, therefore, excused. This teaches an important lesson. Moses "spoke unadvisedly," i.e., rashly and therefore sinfully. Moses ought to have borne patiently with his people. Instead of doing so he exclaimed passionately—"Hear now, ye rebels, must we fetch you waters out of the rock?"—P.

or promised, encourage our prayers, and animate our praise.

PSALM CVII. Ver. 3. There is no characteristic mark by which the speaker can be identified; but from ver. 3, 16, compared with Is. 45.2, it appears to have been written after the return from the Babylonish captivity. South, in the Hebrew, signifies sea, which evidently points to the Persian Gulf, lying south of Babylon. C.

Ver. 4. This cannot refer to the first wandering in the wilderness; for then the people were all gathered out of one land; on the return from Babylon, out of the many provinces of a vast empire. C.

Ver. 11. This verse develops most of the causes of national calamities; and whilst the wise men of the world are ascribing them to every cause but the true one, it traces them at once to rebellion against the words and contempt of the counsels of God. C.

Ver. 14. By comparing this verse with Mat. 4. 15, 16, where a similar description is applied to the rising of the light of Jesus, "the Sun of Righteousness," upon the earth, the psalm will be found, under natural emblems, to veil spiritual realities. C.

Ver. 24. Not even the earthquake is so terrible an example of the divine power, or emblem of the divine wrath, as the sea-storm; the earthquake soon passes over, and is generally confined to a few spots of an island or continent; but the sea-storm continues unabated or increasing for days, and rages over the vast expanse of an ocean, dispersing navies as the light foam upon its waves, and swallowing into its deep recesses the collected riches of distant lands. Yet this terrible storm is the Lord's voice to his children; and, when all other help is vain, "they cry unto him, and he bringeth them out of their distresses." Ah! Britain! Britain! remember the sailor boy! he is the trustee of all thy wealth, the right arm of all thy power. Instruct him when on land—save him from the misguidance of his own untried simplicity; and follow him with thy prayers amid the perils of the great deep: so shall he return to bless thee in the calm of his "desired haven." C.

Ver. 33. Rivers. "Well-watered ground. That such terrible changes have frequently taken place, by the operation of natural causes, geological observation abundantly testifies. Moral causes also operating upon the peace, security, and industry of a country, have often produced similar effects. Both causes, however, are alike the judgments of God, intended to teach man his dependence, and humble him before his Maker. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold the effects of sin in forms unnumbered! in wanderings, in imprisonments, sickness, storms, barrenness, poverty, &c. Behold also the power of effectual fervent prayer!—it brings speedy relief in every case. The holiness and equity, the goodness, mercy, and tenderness of God, are connectedly displayed in his providence to men. With exact and humble care ought we then to consider the doing of the Lord, and to compare it with his word, and with our prayers, and one part of it with another; so shall we understand the loving-kindness of the Lord. And, were we accurate observers of providence, constantly would our heart, our lips, and life, be filled with the high praises of his kindness, and of his wonderful works towards the children of men.

PSALM CVIII. REFLECTIONS.—Quickly God can change the lot, can change the frames, and change the songs of his people; and put high praises in the room of bitter wailings. How confidently then may saints expect to see the salvation of God! What he has promised faith can rejoice in as if already performed: and whatever difficulties be in the way, nothing is too hard for the Lord. However strong their enemies, if they are true, they shall prove more than conquerors through him that loveth them.

PSALM CIX. Ver. 6. This is one of those psalms against which, like its subject, the wicked infidel, and the un instructed believer, have unhappily concurred to "open their mouth." To evade the imaginary impropriety of its heavy curses, some have imagined ver. 6-17 to be uttered by David's enemies. But how come they, in so imagining, to overlook Ac. 1. 16-20, where Judas, and not David, is declared to be its prophetic object? C.

Ver. 8. To vindicate these curses, for they are literally such, will be easy, before those who read and believe, and tremble as they read, De. 27. 15-26, and who fully comprehending Ga. 3. 10, do acknowledge and feel that "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them." C.

Ver. 14. Most probably the sin of early training Judas up to the love of money, pilfering, and malignant cursing, and, so far from repenting of this perverted education, or seeing its bitter fruits, only gnawing her spirit with grief at its want of a successful issue. C.

Ver. 22. Poor and needy. On comparing these epithets with Ps. 40. 17, and remembering that He. 10. 5 proves Ps. xl. to be descriptive of Christ, no doubt can reasonably remain that, in this, he is the speaker likewise. C.

Ver. 23. The shifting and currents of the wind toss the dense swarms of locusts in a very extraordinary manner. Even so was our Lord tossed up and down—at one time borne over palm-leaves and garments, and hailed with loud hosannas!—at another followed with "deepest execrations"—Away with him; away with him! Crucify him; crucify him! C.

Ver. 30. The comparison of this verse with Ps. 18. 40 and Ro. 15. 9, affords another unquestionable parallel proof that he who speaks in the first person is Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful must be the nature of sin, which makes men so desperate and outrageous enemies to the person, work, and kingdom of our Lord are placed beyond all doubt by the frequent quotations from it in the New Testament. Our Lord himself appropriates the words of the first verse, Mat. 22. 44; Mar. 12. 36; and Lu. 20. 42. They are so interpreted by Peter in Ac. 2. 34. In He. 5. 6, Paul applies the words of ver. 4 to Christ; so also in He. 7. 17-21. It is clear from these quotations that the Messianic interpretation of the psalm was universal among the Jews in ancient times. ~~P. --- The~~

PSALM CX.

1 A prediction of the kingdom, 4 priesthood, 5 triumphs, 7 and sufferings of Christ.

A psalm of David.

THE LORD^a said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

2 The LORD shall send^b the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

3 Thy^d people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning:¹ thou hast the dew of thy youth.²

4 The LORD hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

5 The LORD at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath.

6 He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many³ countries.

7 He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head.⁴

PSALM CXI.

1 The psalmist by his example inciteth others to praise God for his glorious and gracious works. 10 The fear of God is the source of true wisdom.

PRAISE ye the LORD.¹ I^a will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.

2 The^b works of the LORD are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.

3 His^d work is honourable and glorious; and his^e righteousness endureth for ever.

4 He^g hath made his wonderful works to be remembered: the LORD is gracious, and full of compassion.

5 Heⁱ hath given meat² unto them that fear him: he will ever be mindful of his covenant.

Amid severe bodily suffering, and deep mental anguish, when earthly comfort would have been vain, the writer looks to, and trusts in God. 15 The^r voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous: the right hand of the LORD doeth valiantly.

16 The right hand of the LORD is exalted; the right hand of the LORD doeth valiantly.

17 I^t shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the LORD.

18 The^r LORD hath chastened me sore; but he hath not given me over unto death.⁷

19 Open^e to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them, and I will praise the LORD:

20 This gate of the LORD, into which the righteous shall enter.

21 I^t will praise thee; for thou hast heard me, and art become my salvation.

22 The^r stone which the builders refused is become the head-stone of the corner.⁸

23 This is the LORD's doing:⁹ it is marvelous in our eyes.

24 This^b is the day which the LORD hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it.

25 Save^e now, I beseech thee, O LORD: O LORD, I beseech thee, send now prosperity.

26 Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the LORD: we have blessed^d you out of the house of the LORD.

27 God^s is the LORD, which hath showed us light: bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar.

28 Thou^h art my God, and I will praise thee: thou art my God, I will exalt thee.

29 Oⁱ give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

ALEPH.

BLESSED are the undefiled¹ in the way, who walk in the law of the LORD.

2 Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart.

3 They^d also do no iniquity: they walk in his ways.

sion into heaven. And, crowned with glory and honour, invested with all power in heaven and on earth, and furnished with all gifts, all blessings, for men, he reigns upon his throne above. Encouraged by these views, let us welcome him into our hearts, families, and churches, and devote ourselves to his service. And believingly claiming him and his Father as our God, our all in all, let us ever exult in his praise.

PSALM CXIX. As in the works of God 'one star differeth from another star in glory,' it is not surprising if, in the Word of God, one portion is found to surpass another in the preciousness of its sacred contents. All parts of Scripture are alike true: yet are there various ways in which one portion may surpass another. Some parts surpass others because they concentrate truths of deeper interest; point the finger of their light towards fairer objects; stir up the weary spirit to higher aspirations; and minister to the sick soul the air and the sun of a brighter climate—and all this because they contain more than other portions do of the person, the humiliation, the sorrows, the fervent prayers, the strong cries, the flowing tears, and earnest supplications—and more of the death, the sacrifice, the resurrection, the righteousness, the intercession, and glory of Jesus!

Of Ps. cxix. all this is specially true; other psalms shine as buildings erected by Phœnician and Jew-corner-stones were of colossal magnitude,

Noble specimens of

The 'head-stone' signifies not the top stone, but the chief stone. We would now term it the founda-

7 As a psalm of devotion, an instruction, the first part of
ver. 22 would be totally without meaning; and the first of ver. 23 almost on the lips of all. As memorials of the truths of our Lord, they are true, and sweet on the lips, and dear the hearts of all his people.—C.

4 Thou^e hast commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently.

5 Oh^h that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes!

6 Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments.²

7 I^t will praise thee with uprightness of heart, when I shall have learned thy righteous judgments.⁴

8 I^t will keep thy statutes: O forsake me not utterly.

BETH.

9 Wherewithal^h shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word.⁵

10 With¹ my whole heart have I sought thee: O let me not wander from thy commandments.

11 Thy^o word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee.

12 Blessed art thou, O LORD: teach me thy statutes.

13 With¹ my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth.

14 I^r have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies, as much as in all riches.

15 I^s will meditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways.

16 I^t will delight myself in thy statutes: I will not forget thy word.

GIMEL.

17 Deal^h bountifully with thy servant, that I may live, and keep thy word.

18 Open⁶ thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

19 I^{am} a stranger in the earth: hide not thy commandments from me.

20 My^a soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times.

21 Thou hast rebuked the proud that are cursed, which do err from thy commandments.

22 Remove from me reproach and contempt; for I have kept thy testimonies.

23 Princes^d also did sit and speak against me: but thy servant did meditate in thy statutes.

judgment and justice, 124.—Thy testimonies are wonderful, therefore doth my soul keep them, 129.—My zeal hath consumed me, 139.—I cried with my whole heart; hear me, O Lord, I will keep thy statutes, 145.—I do not decline from thy testimonies, 157.—I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments; I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies, for all my ways are before thee, 166.—I have chosen thy precepts; I do not forget thy commandments, 173.—176.

Now, that David never imagined such a character for himself is historically unquestionable. The finger of the Spirit of truth ever pointing to his sin renders the supposition impossible. Would Paul have mistaken the portrait for his own? When he dipped his pencil in colours of truth and light, he produced a portrait of himself, inscribed as 'the chief of sinners.' Who then is this? Say, is not this Jesus, the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely? Yes, this is unquestionably the guileless, the spotless Lamb, who magnified the law and made it honourable: who knew no sin, yet was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

In face of this inevitable conclusion, three difficulties present themselves: (1) In ver. 67 the speaker admits, 'Before I was afflicted, I went astray;' and does not this seem to imply an acknowledgment of personal error and sin? Not so, the difficulty arises from the translation. The word here translated 'went astray,' signifies to wander, either naturally or morally. Thus it is translated in a natural and not a moral sense, Ge. 21. 14; 37. 15. Now, if the natural sense explain the passage, and if the moral sense of wandering be utterly inconsistent with the as-

24 Thy^a testimonies also are my delight, and my counsellors.⁸

DALETH.

25 My^a soul cleaveth unto the^a dust: ^aquicken thou me according to thy word.

26 I^a have declared my ways,¹ and thou heardest me; ^ateach me thy statutes.

27 Make me to understand the way of thy precepts: ^aso shall I talk of thy wondrous works.

28 My soul melteth² for heaviness: ^astrengthen thou me according unto thy word.

29 Remove^a from me the way of lying;³ and grant^a me thy law graciously.

30 I^a have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I ^alaid before me.

31 I^a have stuck unto thy testimonies: O LORD, ^aput me not to shame.

32 I^a will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge⁴ my heart.

HE.

33 Teach^a me, O LORD, the way of thy statutes; and ^aI shall keep it unto the end.

34 Give^a me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it ^awith my whole heart.

35 Make^a me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.

36 Incline^a my heart unto thy testimonies, and^b not to covetousness.

37 Turn away⁵ mine eyes ^afrom beholding vanity; and ^aquicker thou me in thy way.⁶

38 Stablish^a thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.

39 Turn^a away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.

40 Behold, ^aI have longed after thy precepts: ^aquicken me in thy righteousness.

VAU.

41 Let^a thy mercies come also unto me, O LORD, even thy salvation,⁷ according to thy word.

42 So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me:⁸ for I trust in thy word.⁹

43 And^a take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth: for ^aI have hoped in thy judgments.

44 So^a shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.¹

45 And I will walk at liberty:² for I seek thy precepts.

49 Remember^a the word unto thy servant, ^aupon which thou hast caused me to hope.

50 This^a is my comfort in my affliction: ^afor thy word hath quickened me.

57 Thou^a art my portion,⁴ O LORD: I have said that I would keep thy words.

58 I^a entreated thy favour⁵ with my whole heart: be merciful unto me according to thy word.

59 I^a thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.⁶

60 I^a made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

61 The^b bands⁷ of the wicked have robbed me: but I have not forgotten thy law.

65 Thou^a hast dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

66 Teach^a me good judgment and knowledge: for I have believed thy commandments.

67 Before^a I was afflicted I went astray: ^abut now have I kept thy word.

68 Thou^a art good, and doest good: ^ateach me thy statutes.

69 The^a proud have forged a lie against me:

serted character of the speaker—a character, be it remembered, every word of which has passed the testing fire of the Holy Spirit, then surely there can be no doubt, that in the natural, and not in the moral sense, the word wandered is here to be taken. (2) A second obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm, arises from the frequent prayers of the speaker for teaching and guidance. But this obstruction arises merely from allowing the brilliancy of the Son's Godhead to dazzle and confuse the eyes in contemplating his manhood. Christ was truly God, Jn. 1, 1, 2, 4; he was as truly man, made in all things like unto his brethren, yet without sin. Now, in this humbled condition he appeared not in the form of God, but 'the form of a servant.' And hence, 'though he were a Son, yet (being in servant form) learned he obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5, 8. And, as the teaching Spirit descended to us only by the prayer of Christ to the Father, Jn. 14, 16, so we behold same Lord, in the days of his flesh, call upon the Father for the same heavenly instruction. (3) The third obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm is found in ver. 176, 'I have gone astray like a lost sheep.' This obstruction, however, is but another mistranslation. The word here translated 'gone astray,' is not the same that occurs in ver. 67. The word here used signifies to punt, and is so translated, Is. 21, 4. A more correct rendering is unquestionably as follows:—'I have punted as a sheep perishing,' and this is in perfect keeping with the life, toils, and condition of our Lord in the sorrowful days of his flesh. C.

This is the most perfect specimen of an acrostic or alphabetical psalm in the whole book. Its peculiarity lies in this, that each letter of the Hebrew alphabet in regular succession begins eight consecutive verses. Though it might be thought that such a LAMED.

89 For ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven.

90 Thy faithfulness is unto all generations: thou hast established the earth, and it abideth.

91 They continue this day according to thine ordinances: for all are thy servants.

92 Unless thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

94 I am thine, save me: for I have sought thy precepts.

95 The wicked have waited for me to destroy me: ^{but} I will consider thy testimonies.

96 I have seen an end of all perfection: ^{but} thy commandment is exceeding broad.

MEM.

97 O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day.

98 Thou, through thy commandments, hast made me wiser than mine enemies; ^{for they are ever with me.}

99 I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation.

100 I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts.

101 I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 I have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

103 How sweet are thy words unto my taste! ^{yea, sweeter} than honey to my mouth!

104 Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way.

NUN.

105 Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.

106 I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments.

107 I am afflicted very much: quicken me, O LORD, according unto thy word.

108 Accept, I beseech thee, the free-will offerings of my mouth, O LORD, and teach me thy judgments.

Ver. 67. I went astray. Whether these be taken as the words of Christ or of some of the prophets, they cannot be taken morally, for that would contradict ver. 22, 31, 51, 55, 56, 61. But these verses describe a character applicable to none but Christ. 'I wandered,' therefore, must be (see preface to this psalm), 'I wandered, that is, as a stranger in a strange land, till by affliction, I learned the end and business of my incarnation, ver. 73, 'was made perfect,' He 5:8, as an example, 1 Pe 2:21, and as a High-priest and sacrifice, that my church might be saved, He 8:1-3; 9:28, C.

Ver. 69. 'The word rendered forged means to patch together; and then it is applied to charges or accusations against any one, perhaps from their being made up (as they often are) of shreds and patches,—hints, small matters, things having no necessary connection in themselves, but brought together as if they pertained to the same transaction,—words dropped here and there in conversation, which, being artfully woven together, seem to make out a plausible case against a man. Most slanders are formed and sustained in this way: for it is rare that an absolutely forged slander is uttered against a man, or that a charge is brought which cannot be made to have plausibility from such circumstances as those referred to above' (Barnes), P.

mode of construction would give a somewhat stiff and constrained formality to the whole poem; yet such is not the case. The genius of the Hebrew poet overcame all restraints, and produced a work, perfect in form, and yet free, beautiful, and inspiring. It has been well said by a recent writer,—'If we would fathom the depth of meaning in the written law of Israel, if we would measure the elevation of soul, the hope, the confidence, even before princes and kings, which pious Jews derived from it, we must turn to this psalm. Here is an epitome of all true religion as conceived by the best spirits of that time.' P.

Ver. 1. Law. From a root signifying to teach. It here signifies all divine instruction, C.

Ver. 2. Testimonies. From a root comprehending the idea of futurity. The witnessings of God concerning things to come, C.

Ver. 4. Precepts. From a word signifying to visit, to inspect. Those orders and institutions that continually remind the church of the visitation of her omnipresent Head, C.

Ver. 5. Statutes. From a root signifying to engrave. These significant divine institutions in which man is specially required neither to add nor diminish, C.

Ver. 13. Were there no other note of character in the whole psalm, this alone seems sufficient to identify the speaker as Christ.

Who else ever declared all the judgments of God?—Note, Law, testimonies, precepts, statutes, commandments, judgments, having been explained in notes on ver 1-7, will not again be noticed, C.

Ver. 18. Those wondrous things that lay in its holy constitution—unbending justice, awful penalties, and glorious end: its successful teachings, bringing souls to Christ; and its marvellous result, in entering, that sin might abound; but effecting, in divine wisdom, that grace did much more abound, C.

Ver. 33. That Christ, though a Son, learned obedience through the things that he suffered, is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, He 5:8. He accordingly prays for the teaching he requires, and thereon resolves, as none but he could resolve without self-ignorance and self-reliance, that he shall keep the statutes of his Father to the end: that is, to the full production of everlasting righteousness, Ro 10:4, C.

Ver. 49. Wishes, expectations, and even hopes may be generated and sustained without any solid foundation. Thus it is said, the hypocrite's hope shall perish, Job 8:13; see also Pr 11:7. True Christian hope can rest upon no foundation but the revealed Word of God, the word of truth and of promise that can never mislead into error, or make ashamed by disappointment, C.

109 My^s soul is continually in my hand; yet^t do I not forget thy law.

110 The^t wicked have laid a snare for me; yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111 Thyⁿ testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: ^ofor they are the rejoicing of my heart.

112 I^p have inclined mine heart to perform^o thy statutes alway, ^{even} unto the end.

SAMECH.

113 I^t hate vain thoughts:⁷ but^t thy law do I love.

114 Thou^t art my hiding-place⁸ and my shield: I ^{hope} in thy word.

115 Depart^r from me, ye evil-doers: for I will keep the commandments of my God.

116 Uphold^r me according unto thy word, that I may live: and let me not be ^{ashamed} of my hope.

117 Hold^r thou me up, and I shall be safe: and^a I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

118 Thou^b hast trodden down all them that err from thy statutes: ^{for} their deceit is falsehood.

119 Thou puttest away⁹ all the wicked of the earth like dross: ^{therefore} I love thy testimonies.

120 My^e flesh trembleth for fear¹ of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments.

AIN.

121 I⁹ have done judgment and justice: ^{leave} me not to mine oppressors.²

122 Be^t surety for thy servant for good: let not the proud oppress me.

123 Mine^j eyes fail for thy salvation, and for the word of thy righteousness.

124 Deal^k with thy servant according unto thy mercy, and ^{teach} me thy statutes.

125 Iⁿ am thy servant; ^{give} me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies.

126 It^p is time for thee, LORD, to work: ^{for} they have made void thy law.³

127 ^{Therefore} I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold.

128 Therefore^r I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and ^I hate every false way.

PE.

129 Thy^t testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them.⁵

x The perfection of the law of God is set forth with great force and beauty in this psalm. It extends to the outward acts of man, to his words, and to the inmost thoughts and affections of his heart. It is exceeding broad and comprehensive.

The psalmist is fully conscious of this.

Another great truth is brought out in connection with the perfection of the law—namely, man's natural weakness, and the necessity for spiritual quickening to enable him to keep the divine law. He therefore prays repeatedly for quickening power. — P.

teaches by words; but his Spirit is the teacher that effects the entrance and diffuses the light of Jesus! C.

Ver. 139. My zeal hath consumed me. The quotation (Jn. 2. 17) from Ps. 69. 9, and, so far as it goes, its perfect parallelism to that in this verse, affords a farther evidence that this psalm is dictated by the Spirit in the person of Christ. C.

Ver. 142. The righteousness of God never means a rule of righteousness, any more than the love of God means a mere rule of love. The love of God means just the love of God; and the righteousness of God means just the righteousness of God, neither more nor less. It is the work which God the Father gave the Son to do; it is the work which God the Father performed. The creature righteousness was dissolved: the Godhead righteousness abideth for ever. C.

Ver. 148. Study, business, and piety alike court early and late hours. The student of nature, art, literature, or science awakes before the sun, outwatches the stars, and often disregards the sacrifice of health at the shrine of his beloved idol. The pursuit of riches claims votaries still more numerous and decided. And surely piety can claim no less. Wherefore, if its studies, privileges, and duties be shuffled into some mere corner of time and attention, what is it but a sure preparative for being speedily and finally cast away?—Note. The continuity of piety in thought, temper, reading, and prayer, is the only sufficient evidence of its sincerity and vitality. C.

Ver. 156. He that prays, 'O Lord, quicken me according to thy judgments,' must be one who has nothing to fear, because certain, when judged, to be justified in the Spirit, 1 Ti. 3. 16. C.

Ver. 157. Fear, favour, and covetousness are the three great causes of declining from a faithful adherence to the testimonies of God. Fear of suffering or loss begets base compliances with error. The favour of wicked men in power leads men away from truth by the influence of pride—while the 'love of money, the root of all evil,' bribes many to forsake what they believe to be true, follow what they know to be error, and practise what they feel to be sin. C.

Ver. 164. Seven times a-day. That seven signifies completeness is undoubted. It seems equally undoubted that here it signifies seven fixed and specific periods for secret prayer.—Note. Fixed times of prayer seem to many inconsistent with the freedom of Christianity and the circumstances of society. If piety were a restraint or a burden, this opinion might be true; but since it is a privilege and a blessing, it must be unfounded. C.

Ver. 169. Let my cry be heard. A cry is the voice of a child in want or pain, or of man or woman in deep and poignant distress. Of the cries of our Lord in his distress we have no special record beyond that contained in Mat. 27. 46, 50. But Paul, by the Spirit, leads us more into the secret history of our Lord's heart, feelings, and sufferings, and declares, in accordance with all that is written of him in the Psalms, that, 'in the days of his flesh,' he 'offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let this psalm be a touchstone by which I may try my heart and my life. Let me constantly inquire—Are these gracious tempers and holy exercises of faith, love, hope, humility, patience, and zeal, to be found in my soul? Has my heart, purged from an evil conscience in Jesus' blood, made these meditations, prayers, resolutions, and confessions truly my own? Is God's Word, his Testaments in Jesus' blood, the sole standard of all my faith and law of my practice? Is it the channel of Jesus' fulness of grace and comfort to my heart? Is it the instructor, the counsellor, the quickener, the medicine, the armour, the treasury, the wealth, the support, the guard, the joy, and the ALL of my soul? Do I receive it as a word to me from God, and use it as my plea with him for whatever I need? Happy is he that is thus living in these delightful exercises! C.

PSALM CXX. Title. This and the fourteen following psalms are entitled Songs of Degrees, or Ascending. Why or from whom they received this title, no man knows, and conjectures are manifold, but useless. C.

Ver. 1. In my distress. There can be no question that Ps. cxviii. is delivered in the name of Christ. See ver. 22. On comparing this verse with Ps. 118. 5, the identity of the speaker in the two psalms will scarcely be questioned. Comp. also Ps. lii. C.

Ver. 4. In ver. 3 a question is asked substantially as follows:—'What shall the deceitful tongue give thee—what will it do to thee?' Reference is made to the person who uses his tongue in this manner. What effect will it entail upon him—what punishment will it bring? The reply is given in ver. 4, in language highly figurative. It will entail such punishment as would be inflicted by the sharp arrows of the warrior; it will bring such exquisite pain as would be produced by the glowing coals of juniper, the heat of which is intense. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Inveterate malice against the saint never refuses the basest means of venting itself: and it is the saints' ordinary lot to be virulently reproached by the wicked. But dreadful, penetrating, destructive, furious, and lasting is the ruin of their reproachers at last! It is grievous for the lovers of God to be long removed from public ordinances, or to be forced by necessity into continued connections with the wicked. But every one born of God ought to be a child of peace. Envy and strife are all from hell. And though others continue inveterate, we ought to abound in charity, and follow the things which make for peace.

PSALM CXXI. Ver. 1. The margin, Boothroyd, and other high authorities, read this verse as two questions, and this sense seems preferable. C.

Ver. 3. Recollecting first that this, being a promise of the Spirit, must be true—then there will be little difficulty in concluding that such a promise could only be realized in Christ. See also ver. 7, 8. Here the church, by the Spirit, replies to Christ, and ministers to him promises nearly parallel to those in Ps. xci. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every difficulty our eyes ought

DAMASCUS GATE—OPENING TOWARDS NAZARETH. [Psalms, cxvii:2.]— “Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem.” Damascus gate, or the gate of the column through which passes the north road to Galilee and Damascus, is the most ornamental of all the gates which stand in the walls of Jerusalem. It is made picturesque because of its many turrets and battlements. The Damascus gate, according to Bartlett, is a fine piece of Saracenic architecture. Other authorities claim that it dates back to a more remote antiquity than Bartlett supposes. This gate is not a great ways from the place supposed by many now to be the site of Mount Calvary. The tombs of the kings are about 1100 paces north of Damascus gate. Next to Jaffa gate, the Damascus gate is the one most frequently used of any in the Jerusalem walls.

PSALM CXXV. Ver. 2. Jerusalem stands on the summit of a broad mountain ridge, which is broken into a wilderness of bare crowns of limestone, separated by deep ravines. Upon two of these crowns, Zion and Moriah, the ancient city was founded; and these two were bounded on the east by the valley of Kidron, and on the west and south by Hinnom. All around the site are loftier summits—nothing approaching to mountains, but rounded, irregular ridges, overtopping the buildings of the city from 50 to 200 ft. Thus it is that 'the mountains are round about Jerusalem,' P.

[Psalms, cxxv:2.]—"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever." East of the valley of Jehoshaphat rises the Mount of Olives. This is one of the mountains which the Psalmist refers to as standing round about Jerusalem. There are a number of olive trees still found upon the mountain, and upon its western base is a cluster of ancient ones known throughout the world to indicate the Garden of Gethsemane. The top of this mountain is held by many to be the place where the Savior left the earth, and his footsteps are still shown to those who are willing to believe extraordinary things. According to the Scripture, Christ ascended from Bethany. From the top of the Mount of Olives we have the most commanding view of the city of Jerusalem.

BLESSED ^bis every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For^c thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: ^ahappy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

6 Yea, ^dthou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel.

PSALM CXXIX.

1 An exhortation to praise God for saving Israel in their great afflictions. 5 The haters of the church are cursed.

8 And¹ he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

PSALM CXXXI.

1 David, professing his humility, 3 exhorteth Israel to hope in God.
A song of degrees of David.

LORD, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty; neither do I exercise¹ myself in great matters, or in things too high² for me.

2 Surely I have behaved and quieted³ myself, as a child that is weaned of his mother: my soul is even as a weaned child.

3 Let⁴ Israel hope in the LORD from henceforth⁴ and for ever.

PSALM CXXXII.

1 David, in his prayer, commendeth unto God the religious care he had for the ark. 8 His prayer at the removing of the ark, 11 with a repetition of God's promises.

A song of degrees.

LORD, remember¹ David, and all his afflictions:

2 How² he swore unto the LORD, and vowed unto the mighty God of Jacob;

3 Surely I will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed;

4 I will not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids,

5 Until I find out³ a place for the LORD, an habitation¹ for the mighty God of Jacob.

6 Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah:² we found it in the fields of the wood.⁴

7 We¹ will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool.⁵

8 Arise, O LORD, into thy rest; thou, and the ark of thy strength.

9 Let¹ thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy.

10 For¹ thy servant David's sake turn not away the face of thine anointed.

Ps. 68. 11; 78. 61; Nu. 10. 35; 2 Ch. 6. 41, 42.
1 ver. 11; 1 Ki. 11. 13; 15. 5; 2 Sa. 7. 22; Ho. 3. 5.

Israel into apostasy, as Midian, Nu. 25. 2, 3; and afterwards Antiochus, severally attempted—nor have they prevailed to extirpate the nation, as Hatan sought, and several Gentile nations have since endeavoured. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every age the seed of the serpent has raged in enmity against Jesus Christ and his church. There is no going honourably to heaven but through great tribulation. But let the wicked lay their plots, and execute them as they will, God will deliver all who accept Christ; and unbelievers shall plunge themselves at last into the most dreadful disappointment and ruin. The curse of God shall blast them, with all their schemes and attempts.

PSALM CXXX. Ver. 1. On comparing this verse with Ps. 40. 1, 2, &c., there can be no doubt of their parallelism; but that Ps. xl. is spoken in the person of Christ, is settled by the quotation, He. 10. 5, whence it follows that in this psalm the speaker also is Messiah. C.

Ver. 3. If thou shouldst mark down sins indelibly, instead of cleansing them away in the blood of the Lamb, who would dare to appear before thee under such innumerable and condemning stains? C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the most fearful manner God often corrects his own children in their way to his kingdom. But while there is a praying heart within them, and a prayer-hearing God above them, there is no ground of despair. Sense of guilt is the first thing that strikes the mind of a convicted sinner; and did not God manifest his forgiving mercy, it would drive him to despair. But the faith of God's forgiving our sins, for Christ's sake, bestirs a holy awe of, regard to, and earnest waiting for him. And the more we taste of God's forgiving and redeeming goodness, the more shall we encourage others to flee to him, and hope in him, in the time of great guilt and trouble. And not only is God ready to, but he certainly will, accomplish

2 Lift^e up your hands in the sanctuary,^a and bless the LORD.

3 The LORD, that made heaven and earth, bless^d thee out of Zion.

PSALM CXXXV.

1 An exhortation to God's servants to praise him for his goodness, 6 for his power, 8 for his judgments. 15 The vanity of idols. 19 An exhortation to bless God.

PRAISE ye^a the LORD. Praise ye the name¹ of the LORD; praise him, O ye servants of the LORD.

2 Ye that stand in the house of the LORD, in the courts of the house of our God,

3 Praise^e the LORD; for the LORD is good: sing praises unto his name; ^afor it is pleasant.

4 For^a the LORD hath chosen Jacob² unto himself, and Israel³ for his peculiar treasure.

5 For I know that ^athe LORD is great, and that our LORD is above all gods.

6 Whatsoever^a the LORD pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places.⁴

7 He^a causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings for the rain; he bringeth the wind out of his treasures.

8 Who^a smote the first-born of Egypt, both of man and beast.⁵

9 Who^a sent tokens and wonders into the midst of thee, O Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his servants.

10 Who^a smote great nations, and slew mighty kings:

11 Sihon king of the Amorites, and Og king of Bashan, and all the kingdoms of Canaan:

12 And gave their land for an ^aheritage, ^aan heritage unto Israel his people.

13 Thy^a name, O LORD, endureth for ever; and thy memorial, O LORD, throughout all generations.⁷

14 For^a the LORD will judge his people; and he will repent himself concerning his servants.⁸

15 The^a idols of the heathen are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

16 They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not;

17 They have ears, but they hear not; neither is there any breath in their mouths.

18 They^a that make them are like unto them: so is every one that trusteth in them.

23 Who^r remembered us in our low estate: for his mercy endureth for ever:

24 And hath redeemed us from our enemies: for his mercy endureth for ever.

25 Who^t giveth food to all flesh: for his mercy endureth for ever.

PSALM CXXXVII.

1 The constancy of the Jews in captivity. 7 The prophet curseth Edom and Babel.

BY the^a rivers of Babylon, there we^b sat down; yea, we wept when "we remembered Zion.¹

2 We^d hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof.

3 For^e there they that carried us away captive required of us a song;² and they that wasted us³ required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion.

4 How⁹ shall we sing the LORD's song in a strange land?⁴

5 If^h I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.

6 If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; "if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.⁵

7 Remember,^j O LORD, "the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem; who said, Rase⁶ it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof.

8 O daughter⁷ of Babylon, "who art to be destroyed;⁸ happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.⁹

9 Happy shall he be that taketh and "dasheth thy little ones against the stones.¹

PSALM CXXXVIII.

1 David praiseth God for the truth of his word. 4 He prophesieth that the kings of the earth shall praise God. 7 He professeth his confidence in God.

A psalm of David.

I WILL praise^a thee with my whole heart: before^b the gods will I sing praise unto thee.

2 I^c will worship toward thy holy temple, and^d praise thy name for thy loving-kindness and for thy truth: for "thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.

9 "This psalm relates to the presence of God, and contains such reflections as would recur to one meditating on that attribute of Deity. It is the most distinct and full statement of that doctrine which is to be found in the Hebrew Scriptures, and the doctrine is presented in language which has never been surpassed for sublimity and beauty. The leading idea in the psalm seems to be that of comfort from the fact that God is everywhere; that he knows all that pertains to us; that we cannot be hidden from his view; that he has known us from the beginning; that as he fashioned and formed us—making us what we are—he knows all our necessities and can supply them' (Barnes).—P.

PSALM CXXXIX.

1 David praiseth God for his all-seeing providence, 17 and for his infinite mercies. 19 He depreceth the wicked. 23 He prayeth for sin-curity.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

O LORD, thou^a hast searched me, and known me.

2 Thou knowest my "down-sitting, and mine up-rising; "thou understandest my thought afar off.¹

3 Thou compasses² my path, and my lying down, and art "acquainted with all my ways.

4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, "thou knowest it altogether.

5 Thou⁹ hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6 Such^h knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain³ unto it.

7 Whither^h shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 Ifⁱ I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell,⁴ behold,^k thou art there.

9 If I take the wings of the morning,⁵ and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; "even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, the darkness "hideth⁶ not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike⁷ to thee.

Jesus is seen to be that "Bread that cometh down from heaven," how much more wonderful then the number and necessities of the claimants, and how much more wonderful the grace of the Provider! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how averse are mankind to the infinitely reasonable and delightful duty of praise and thanksgiving! They need repeated calls to it, even after it has been attended with remarkable blessings. God's mercy and goodness delightfully fill his nature and works, the most awful and tremendous not excepted. And stupid and careless observers must they be of creatures and events, who do not everywhere perceive the manifold and everlasting mercy and kindness of God. Past mercies ought never to be forgotten, nor present ones overlooked; and all should issue in repeated returns of grateful praise

PSALM CXXXVII. Ver. 1. The chief rivers of the Babylonian empire were, the united Euphrates and Tigris, which, dividing into several branches, form many rivers. See Eze. 1. 1; Da. 8. 2. Of the united Euphrates and Tigris, and the canals traversing the city to water its palaces, parks, and gardens, the psalm evidently seems to speak. C.

Ver. 2. Babylon was a square sixty miles in circuit; its streets fifteen miles in length. There will, therefore, be no difficulty in imagining how in so many squares as the city afforded, there would be a profusion of willows for the harps of the melancholy exiles. C.

Ver. 3. Want of sympathy with the feelings of others is one of the commonest forms of human selfishness—of human sinfulness. C.

Ver. 9. Happy. This implies no praise of deeds of horror, but the honour due to the judge who pronounces sentence against an incorrigible criminal. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The sins of God's people often reduce them to great misery on earth. They are often taught the worth of ordinances by the want of them; and their temple songs are turned into howlings and grief. But cruel are the tender mercies of the wicked to God's suffering saints. And it is base and "blasphemous to insult them with their worshipping of God. Sacred songs ill suit the call or company of profane scoffers. That which is holy ought not to be given to dogs, nor pearls cast before swine. The interest of Jesus' church and kingdom must ever be dearer to us than our life: and if duty be once clear, nothing must deter us from it. Not selfish desire, but holy zeal, must dictate our requests for the blessings of God on the church. Malicious and inhuman is all wickedness, and tremendous and correspondent is the punishment of it!

13 For 'thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

14 I will praise thee; for 'I am fearfully and wonderfully made: 'marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well.⁸

15 My⁹ substance⁹ was not hid from thee, when I was made in 'secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.¹

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all² my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned,³ when⁴ as yet there was none of them.⁴

17 How⁵ precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: 'when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely⁷ thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart⁷ from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For⁸ they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 Do⁹ not I hate⁵ them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22 I hate them with perfect hatred; I ¹⁰count them mine enemies.

23 Search¹¹ me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts;

Ver. 7. Spirit, when contrasted with presence, literally faces, means the Holy Spirit, Jn. 14. 16, 17, 26. This passage asserts, in the strongest manner, the omnipresence of the Spirit: but whoever is omnipresent must be God. C.

Ver. 12. That darkness to one creature is light to another is beyond question. This consideration may help our infirmity in discerning how much more to the Creator darkness must be as light—for 'God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.' C.

Ver. 13. Reins. The kidneys—called the reins, from the governing and guiding power which the Hebrews attributed to them in the animal and mental economy—were primary parts of the inward, offered in sacrifice to God. See Le. 3. 4, 10, 15. To 'possess the reins,' therefore, signifies to possess the whole internal powers, as a devoted sacrifice to the divine majesty. C.

Ver. 24. Lead me, &c. Lead me 'in the old way' in which believers have worshipped thee, in spirit and in truth, since the beginning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the faith of these things let me always live, and always act, whether in religious or in civil affairs, under the deepest impressions of God's eyes upon me, his perfect knowledge of my heart, my thoughts, and deeds; of his all-filling presence ever with me, to witness, support, or comfort me; of his marvellous formation of me in nature and grace; of his new-covenant marriage to me, and his everlasting redemption of my soul. Let my whole life, night and day, be filled up with precious, fixed, and delightful thoughts concerning these things, and with holy improvements of them. Let me never make the Lord's enemies my intimates. They who hate God hate his name and image wherever it appears. Let me therefore hate the ways of sinners, while I have true love and pity to their souls. And let a thorough cleansing from sin, and progress in holiness, be the earnest desire and ineffable delight of my soul.

PSALM CXL. Ver. 1. 'Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?' Ac. 8. 34. Let the prayerful inquirer consult Ps. xl., interpreted by He. 10. 5; then compare Ps. 2. 4, interpreted by Ac. 4. 26, with Ps. 59. 8, and consider its prayer for deliverance, compared with the similar prayer of this psalm, see also Ps. xlii. lix. lxi. lxxi.—and the parallelism, nay the identity of the descriptions and petitions must point to Messiah in the days of his flesh, as the speaker in this psalm. The chief object of the prayer is deliverance from Judas and his employers, the high-priest and Pharisees, and from Antichrist, that wicked one, 2 Th. 2. 8, and his persecuting followers in apostate Babylon. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, as in a glass, how maliciously Jesus Christ was reproached and persecuted; how he gave himself to prayer on account of it; and how the judgment of God overtook his Jewish murderers and persecutors! Let us likewise observe, that sin turns men into a kind of devils, in deceit, malice, and diligence in evil, and in inveterate opposition to the people of God. But the saints may attain, even amidst their troubles, to the most pleasant prayers and praises; for God terribly resents the injuries done to his people; and kindly will he maintain their cause, and for their protection afford them his presence.

PSALM CXL. REFLECTIONS.—A deep sense of PSALM CXXXVIII. Ver. 1. When it is considered (1) That the speaker is one; (2) That he promises unreservedly his whole heart; and (3) That these words are a distinct parallel to Ps. 18. 49; Ro. 15. 9, then there can remain little question that the speaker is Christ. C.

Ver. 2. Magnified thy word. Thy word of promise, in its actual fulfilment, has magnified thee beyond all that thy name had led thy people to expect. See notes on Ex. 34. 5; Ps. 8. 1. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The greatest on earth need not be ashamed of the public and regular worship of God. And the more he manifests his loving-kindness and faithfulness in the fulfilment of his word to us, the more high and hearty ought to be our notes of praise. If we trust to his truth, he will display every perfection, and make every creature to work together for the glorious accomplishment of his word. If we flee to God in prayer, he will not leave us destitute. And if he, by our afflictions, strengthen us inwardly in our souls, we are great gainers. The cheerful behaviour of saints in the ways of God engages their neighbours to join with them in it. And the more humble men are, the more God regards and exalts them. And nothing is more detestable to him than indulged pride. Whatever trouble God casts his people into, he will protect and preserve them in it. And the good works of grace or salvation which he begins, he will perfect at last. He will never leave nor forsake his own. Let us then trust in him at all times, and pour out our hearts before him.

PSALM CXXXIX. Ver. 1. The speaker is one throughout the whole psalm—one still with God, ver. 18—one who drives far from him all 'bloody men,' ver. 19, who hates them with 'perfect

PSALM CXLIII.

1 David prayeth for favour in judgment. 3 He complaineth of his griefs. 5 He strengtheneth his faith by meditation and prayer. 7 He prayeth for grace, 9 for deliverance, 10 for sanctification, 12 and for the destruction of his enemies.

A psalm of David.

HEAR my^a prayer, O LORD; give ear to my supplications: ^ain thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.¹

2 And^a enter not into judgment with thy servant: for ^ain thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For^a the enemy hath persecuted my soul;
he hath smitten my life down to the ground;
he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore^a is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I^a remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I ^astretch forth my hands unto thee: ^amy soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. ^aSelah.

7 Hear^a me speedily, O LORD; my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, lest I be like^a unto them that go down into the pit.

8 Cause^a me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning;⁴ for in thee do I trust: ^acause me to know the way wherein I should walk; ^afor I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver^a me, O LORD, from mine enemies:
^aI flee unto thee to hide me.⁵

10 Teach^a me to do thy will; for thou art my God: ^athy Spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness.

11 Quicken^a me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: ^afor thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And^a of thy mercy cut off mine ^aenemies, need will make us importunate in prayer for speedy help, gracious acceptance, direction, preservation, and merciful restraints. Faithful and Christian reproof is a necessary and kind office of friendship. And to love reproof, and be thankful for it, is one of the surest symptoms of a gracious heart. But that reproof will be most effectual which comes from those whose unsuspected piety gives weight to their words, and whose tender manner of applying it renders it soft and penetrating. For men to pray to be put right, and yet to be displeased with rebuke for what is wrong, is base dissimulation. Often people never regard God's candidates for the magistracy or ministry, till their own be destroyed or shamefully disgraced. But let the case of the church or saints be ever so deplorable, fervent prayers will soon render it hopeful. And if our eyes be fixed on God, our feet shall not slip. But the destruction of the wicked is determined, and their devices to hurt others shall but hasten their own wretchedness.

PSALM CXLII. Ver. 1. This is a specimen of those 'prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears,' which Christ offered up 'in the days of his flesh' to 'Him that was able to save him, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. If any desire more evidence of Christ speaking in these words, let them examine Ps. xvi. xxxi. xxxiv. lxix., which various quotations in the New Testament have, by the Spirit, interpreted of him; and their parallelism with this psalm must equally assign it to Messiah. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sore troubles ought to produce fervent prayers. They who have the God of all grace to flee to, may safely leave in his hand all their troubles. And when our consciences condemn us not, then have we confidence before him. We can never be brought so low but God can help us. If men forsake or disregard us, God, as our refuge and portion, will more than balance our want. If we are even fettered in the bands of corruption, temptation, or trouble, he can deliver us. And the mercies which our brethren enjoy should excite our praises, as members of the same body.

PSALM CXLIII. Ver. 2. Christ was not justified, that is, judged in the flesh, and legally pronounced righteous as a living man; but 'he was delivered (that is, to death) for our offences, and raised for our justification,' Ro. 4. 25, being 'put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit,' 1 Pe. 3. 18; and as Paul expresses it, 'God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit,' 1 Ti. 3. 16. C.

Ver. 10. Teach me. Let it never be forgot, that the Word that was truly God, became as truly flesh; and that Jesus, 'though a Son, learned obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5. 8. C.

Ver. 11. Quicken me.—God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, hath quickened us together with Christ,' Ep. 2. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—If ever we hope for God's acceptance of us, it must not be for anything in us, but purely of grace, for his dear Son's sake, according to the promises of his Word. The most righteous cannot bear the severity of God's justice. They who best know their own hearts will ever be the first to condemn themselves, and to cry for mercy at God's hand. And they who plead guilty before the law, and flee to the grace of the gospel in Christ, shall be justified from all things. When our distress is greatest, God's power and grace shall be the more magnified in our deliverance. Though it be hard to exercise courageous faith under sore troubles, yet remembrance of God's kindness, to ourselves or others, in former times, is very encouraging. And they who thirst for his presence, favour, and love, shall never be sent away empty from his throne of grace; whatever manifestations of mercy, direction, instruction, deliverance, guidance, quickenand destroy all them that afflict my soul: ⁹for I am thy servant.

PSALM CXLIV.

1 David blesseth God for his mercy both to him and to man. 5 He prayeth that God would powerfully deliver him from his enemies. 9 He promiseth to praise God. 11 He prayeth for the happy state of the kingdom under God's favour.

A psalm of David.¹

BLESSED be the LORD my strength,² which teacheth my hands to war,³ and my fingers to fight.

2 My⁴ goodness,⁴ and my fortress; my high tower, and my deliverer; my shield, and he in whom I trust; who subdueth my people under me.

3 LORD,⁵ what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him!

4 Man⁶ is like to vanity: ⁷his days are as a shadow that passeth away.

5 Bow⁹ thy heavens, O LORD, and come down: touch the mountains, and they shall smoke.

6 Cast¹⁰ forth lightning, and scatter them:⁵ shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.⁶

7 Send¹¹ thine hand⁷ from above; rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from the hand of ⁸strange children;

8 Whose⁸ mouth speaketh vanity; and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

9 I will sing a new song unto thee, O God: upon a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.

10 It¹² is he that giveth salvation⁸ unto kings; who delivereth David⁹ his servant from the hurtful sword.

11 Rid¹⁰ me, and deliver me from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood:

12 That our sons may be ¹³as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be ¹⁴as corner-stones, polished¹ after the similitude of a palace;²

13 That¹⁵ our garners may be full, affording all manner of store;³ that our sheep may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets;

14 That our oxen may be strong to labour;⁴ that there be no ¹⁶breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in our streets.

PSALM CXLIV.

B.C. cir. 1048.

1 This psalm is mainly a compilation made, probably by the author himself, from portions of other psalms, and arranged in one complete form for some special purpose. The principal portions of it are found in Ps. 19, 8; xxxiii. civ. The general burden is a prayer to Jehovah for help and deliverance in prospect of some impending danger. It is the song of a warrior, but of one who feels that his courage, his skill, and his physical strength must be sustained by God.—P.

PSALM CXLV.

1 David praiseth God for his fame, 8 for his goodness, 11 for his kingdom, 14 for his providence, 17 and for his saving mercy.

a David's psalm of praise.¹

I WILL extol thee, my God, O King; and I will bless thy name² for ever and ever.

2 Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

3 Great³ is the LORD, and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable.³

4 One⁴ generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts.

5 I will speak of the glorious honour of thy majesty, and of thy wondrous works.⁴

6 And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts; and I will declare⁵ thy greatness.

7 They shall abundantly utter⁶ the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness.

8 The⁷ LORD is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and of great mercy.⁷

9 The⁸ LORD is good to all;⁸ and his tender mercies are over all his works.⁹

10 All⁹ thy works shall praise thee, O LORD; and thy saints shall bless thee.

11 They¹⁰ shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power;

12 To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom.

13 Thy¹¹ kingdom is an everlasting¹ kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations.

14 The¹² LORD upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down.

20 The^e LORD preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy.

21 My^e mouth shall speak the praise of the LORD: and let ^aall flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever.⁵

PSALM CXLVI.

1 The psalmist voweth perpetual praises to God. 3 He exhorteth not to trust in man. 5 God, for his power, justice, mercy, and kingdom, is only worthy to be trusted.

PRAISE ye the LORD.¹ Praise^a the LORD, O my^e soul.²

2 While^b I live will I praise the LORD: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being.³

3 Put^c not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help.⁴

4 His^d breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

5 Happy^e is he that hath the God of Jacob⁵ for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God;

6 Which⁹ made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is; ^bwhich keepeth trust for ever;

7 Whichⁱ executeth judgment for the oppressed; which ^jgiveth food to the hungry. The^k LORD looseth the prisoners:

8 The^l LORD openeth the eyes of the blind:⁶ the LORD ^mraiseth them that are bowed down: the LORD loveth the righteous:

9 The LORD ⁿpreserveth the strangers; he relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the ^oway of the wicked he turneth upside down.⁷

10 The^r LORD shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLVII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his care of the church, 4 his power, 6 and his mercy: 7 to praise him for his providence: 12 to praise him for his blessings upon the kingdom, 15 for his power over the elements, 19 and for his ordinances in the church.

PRAISE ye the LORD: ^afor it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely.

2 The^b LORD doth build up Jerusalem: ^che gathereth together the outcasts of Israel.

3 He^d healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds.¹

4 He^e telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names.

REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite greatness, the unbounded grace, and everlasting preciousness of a God in Christ! Happy are they who spend their time and their eternity in the enjoyment and praises of him! How delightful is it to tell our neighbours, to tell our posterity, that which our eyes have seen, and our hearts have believed, concerning this God, who is LOVE; and to tell how this God shall be our God for ever! And it is delightful to behold and praise our exalted Redeemer, who fills heaven and earth with his kindness.

PSALM CXLVI. Ver. 1. The Son, as Prophet of the church, first calls upon all, and then upon that 'reasonable soul' which he took when he 'became flesh' to praise Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit. C.

Ver. 9. Strangers. Those who confess that they are 'strangers and pilgrims on the earth,' 'who desire a better country, that is, an heavenly,' He. 11. 13-16. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they whose God is the LORD, and whose praises never end! But the greatest on earth appear as insignificant nothings before God, or even to a gracious heart. Nothing on earth is properly a man's property but his grave. But though in man there be no help, no ground of hope, our God-man is mighty to save; and hope in him knows no disappointment. Be stirred up, therefore, my soul, to depend on him, who is my almighty Maker, my faithful and promise-performing Friend, my kind and righteous Protector, my bountiful Provider, my omnipotent Deliverer, my gracious Enlightener, my seasonable Restorer, my perpetual Preserver, and the just Punisher of all evil—my King, my God, and my ALL.

PSALM CXLVII. Ver. 1. The grammar of the psalm, as seen in the phrase 'our God,' ver. 1, 5, 7, discovers the speaker to be the church in her collective and corporate capacity, calling

PSALM CXLVIII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the celestial, 7 the terrestrial, 11 and the rational creatures, to praise God.

Ver. 2. The Lord doth build up Jerusalem. All the works ascribed to the Lord, throughout the psalm, are works that he is always doing. Accordingly, after every siege and demolition God, by his providence, immediately proceeded to build up Jerusalem again, his architectural witness to all nations: and 'the outcasts of Israel' he has always continued to gather, temporally, into separate and cohesive communities; and spiritually, into one body and temple in Christ Jesus, Ep. 4. 11-16; 1 Pe. 2. 5. in himself, when his greatness, wisdom, power, and goodness are so manifested in all his works. And when he so observes and provides for all his creatures, how impossible is it that his ransomed children should be overlooked or starved! Much of God is to be seen in all around us—in luminaries, in animals, in crops, in seasons, in human persons or societies; but, above all, in his church and in his word. If these be abused by us, it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for us.

PSALM CL.

An exhortation to praise God with all kinds of musical instruments.

PRAISE ye the LORD.¹ Praise^a God in his sanctuary: praise him in ^bthe firmament of his power.²

2 Praise him ^cfor his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.

REFLECTIONS.—How great and good must God appear to his people, when their minds are so overcharged with their debt of praise! And indeed, had the praises of God but due room on earth, it would much resemble heaven. But none are more deep in the debt of praise than faithful men; sometime afar off, but now brought near to him by the blood of his Son!

PSALM CXLIX. Ver. 2. Israel. They that have obtained a 'new name,' who wrestle with God in prayer, and prevail, by faith, in the name of Jesus, Ge. 24. 28; Ho. 12. 3, 4; Jn. 14. 13. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold here Jesus and his gospel church chiefly in her millennial state. He and his people mutually rejoice in one another:—while they praise him, he imparts the blessings of salvation to them; and while he goes forth in his chariots of salvation, conquering sinners by his grace, or in his chariots of judgment, to oppose his Jewish, heathen, and anti-christian enemies, by their prayers and influence they work together with him.

PSALM CL. Ver. 1. The first verse marks the place where the Lord is to be praised—the sanctuary on earth, the firmament above. C.

Ver. 2. The second verse assigns reasons for praise—God's mighty acts, and the multitude of his acts. C.

Ver. 3-6. The remaining portion of the psalm calls first upon instruments of every construction, and finally upon everything that breathes, to praise the Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who dwell in God's house above—they are always praising him on the highest key! And happy are they who are on the way to it—they have always matter, and often a heart, for praise.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Hebrew title of the Book of Psalms is 'Praises,' because the praise of God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor—as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier—constitutes their principal subject. The Greek title, whence our English name, 'Psalms,' is derived from the Septuagint, and describes these sacred compositions as accompanied by musical instruments. And this accompaniment was in accordance with the law of Moses, Le. 23. 24, &c., and the ritual appointed by divine revelation in the days of David and Solomon, 1 Ch. xvi.

But while praise is justly due to God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor of the world, much more is it due to him as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier. And as God the Father is made known and glorified by the Son—and as the Spirit glorifies both Father and Son, by taking 'the things of Christ and showing them' to believers—so it was to be expected that Christ, the beloved Son of God, the Messiah, the Saviour of sinners, would furnish the chief subject of praise in the heart and the songs of the church. Accordingly we have seen that the Psalms are full of Christ—the church on earth strictly imitating the church in heaven, in asserting that 'worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing;' and in ascribing 'blessing, and honour, and glory, and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever.'

The Psalms constitute the great storehouse of prayer in every mood and condition of the spirit. 'Is any merry—let him sing psalms.' Is any sad—they will teach him to cry from the depths of affliction. Is any persecuted—they will furnish him with petitions for a refuge and deliverance. Is any in want—they will lead him to the Friend of the poor and needy. Is any in sickness—they will lead him the way to the true Physician. Is any dying and in misery—they will show him the path of life, ending in fulness of joy at the right hand of the Eternal. And all this they do, because they are the spiritual revelations of the 'supplications, strong crying, and tears' of Jesus in the days of his flesh; and therefore furnish to his disciples the model and the material of their prayers of faith.

The writers of some of the Psalms are known, and the Jews enumerate ten. But this is of little importance—for that the author of all was the Spirit of God, we have the fullest evidence. Thus, independently of that heavenly character which bears witness of their heavenly origin—we have, in the New Testament, more frequent attestations of their divine origin, than for any other book of the whole Scripture collection. They are at least fifty times quoted by our Lord or his apostles. And besides furnishing to our Lord the most powerful of his arguments against the unbelieving Jews, they also furnished him the words in which, upon the cross, he both prayed and expired.

According to the Masoretic copies and the Syriac version, the Psalms are divided into five books: the first extending from Ps. i. to xl.—the second from Ps. xli. to lxxii.—the third from Ps. lxxiii. to lxxxix.—the fourth from Ps. xc. to cvi.—and the fifth from Ps. cvii. to cl. The first four of these end with 'Amen and Amen;' the last with 'Hallelujah.' This division was very ancient, as it evidently existed before the Septuagint translation.

Most of the Psalms have titles prefixed, which by some, as ancient traditionary expositions of the contents, are held in high esteem, and considered as endued with a kind of canonical authority. But some of the highest authorities amongst the ancient Christian writers—as Augustine and Theodoret—have freely admitted that these titles have often no relation to the body of the psalm, and seldom contribute anything to the discovery of the meaning. In their great obscurity all are agreed; and conjectural meanings are so various that they cease to be of value. These titles have accordingly been retained, partly out of respect to those that, in any degree, value them; and partly as mere relics of antiquity, esteemed not for any intrinsic worth, but as samples and memorials of the works of other times.

That the Psalms are occasionally prophetic of Christ no Christian can overlook or deny. That but few, however, are thus prophetic of him, has been an opinion extensively circulated and received—the number of such specialty prophetic psalms being ordinarily confined to Ps. ii. xvi. xxii. xl. xlv. lxxviii. lxxii. lxxxvii. cx. and cxviii. But were the correctness of this meagre enumeration admitted, still the real relation of the Psalms to Christ remains unsettled. For the real question is, not how many psalms are prophetic, but how many are descriptive of Christ, and proved to be descriptive of him, because they apply accurately to him, and however they may be strained by the efforts of 'accommodation,' still utterly refuse to become applicable to any other. Could we conclude with Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Augustine, Ambrose, Euthymius, and others of the ancient Christian writers, that David was the author of all the Psalms—or admitting, as is commonly believed, that other inspired authors wrote a part of the collection—yet could we accurately ascertain how many were composed by David—and it is upon all hands admitted that he composed a large portion—we would then be able, upon David's own authority, or rather upon that of the Spirit speaking by him, greatly to extend, if not to universalize, the prophetic boundaries of the Psalms. For that the psalms written by David himself were prophetic we have David's own authority, which, as Horsley observes, may be allowed to overpower a host of modern expositors. For thus king David at the close of his life describes himself and his sacred songs: 'David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said, The Spirit of Jehovah spake by me, and his word was my tongue,' 2 Sa. 23. 1, 2. It was the word, therefore, of Jehovah's Spirit which was uttered by David's tongue. But it should seem the Spirit of Jehovah would not be wanting to enable a mere man to make complaint of his own enemies, to describe his own sufferings just as he felt them, and his own escapes just as they happened. But the Spirit of Jehovah described, by David's utterance, what was known to that Spirit only, and that Spirit only could describe. So that if David be allowed to have had any knowledge of the true subject of his own compositions, it was nothing in his own life, but something put into his mind by the Holy Spirit of God; and the misapplication of the Psalms to the literal David has done more mischief than the misapplication of any other parts of the Scriptures among those who profess the belief of the Christian religion. (See Horsley on the Psalms, vol. i. p. 14.) Nor do we hesitate to express our firm conviction, that a right interpretation of the Psalms, whereby Christ is so clearly discovered in his person, his offices, his passion, his victories, his glories, and his judgment, will bring a light, a comfort, and a joy to the heart of the believer, unknown while darkness lay upon this blessed portion of the Sacred Volume. THE BOOK OF PROVERBS,

And the two immediately following, were penned by Solomon, the renowned king of Israel. Its Hebrew name MISCHLIM imports sentences well pressed together, and powerful to command our assent and regulate our conduct. Teaching by such proverbs, or short substantial sentences, was a very ancient, and is a very plain, profitable, and easy method of instruction. These Proverbs of Solomon are not a mere collection of the wise sayings which had been uttered before his time, but are the inspired dictates of the Holy Ghost to him; and are often quoted or alluded to as such in other inspired books. This book comprehends: (1) A preface; consisting of manifold exhortations to the study and improvement of true wisdom, and of warnings to avoid connections or intimacy with wicked persons, whoredom, rash suretiship, sloth, &c. ch. i.-ix. (2) The Proverbs themselves; published from the beginning, x.-xxiv., or copied out by the direction of Hezekiah, xxv.-xxix. (3) The appendix; containing the prophecy of Agur, and the directions of his mother to him, xxx. xxxi. As the Book of Psalms is calculated to make our hearts warm towards God in holy and pious affections, the scope of this is to make our face shine before men in a prudent, discreet, honest, and useful conversation; which is a no less necessary part of religion. And no book in the world, in so small a compass, affords us such a complete body of rules for directing our personal and relative behaviour.

THE Proverbs^a of Solomon, the son of David, king of Israel;

2 To^b know¹ wisdom and instruction; to perceive² the words of understanding;

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. The choice, divine, substantial, instructive, and governing, but sometimes darkly expressed, sentences of the incomparably wise and inspired Solomon. 2. Framed by the Spirit of God to teach men true and solid wisdom in things pertaining to God and their neighbour, to enable them to discern sin and duty, and to receive and profit by whatever good instructions or advices are given them: 3. To incline and persuade them readily to hearken to such instructions as direct them to live in a wise, candid, upright, and virtuous manner; 4. That those who are unskilful, rash, and incautious, may become circumspect, prudent, and discreet in their conduct: 5. And those who are wise in the matters of time and eternity, may become still more wise and prudent; and be able, with great advantage, to govern themselves and others; 6. And be capable of finding out the meaning of the wise, though dark, sayings of God or men, and profitably to apply them to themselves, or explain them to others.—7. It is necessary that every one who desires true wisdom should begin with, and chiefly study, the saving knowledge of God, and live under a holy awe in the love, worship, and service of him; as, without this, all other knowledge is vain and useless; and, for want of it, wicked men, who prefer trifles to things of infinite importance, pour contempt on the wisest instructions that can be given them. 8, 9. And, next to the fear of God, it is necessary, my dear young men, that you reverence, honour, and obey your parents, and gladly receive and earnestly practise their instructions, as things of inestimable value, which will render you more amiable and honourable than all the gay adorning on earth. 10. And, in order to promote the fear of God and regard to parental instructions, see that with the utmost circumspection and earnestness you avoid all unnecessary fellowship with wicked persons, and all hearkening to their flattering enticements. 11-15. If, in the most courteous manner, and by every argument drawn from profound secrecy, sure success, immense profit, and good fellowship, they would seduce you to

3 To receive³ the instruction of wisdom, justice, and judgment, and equity;⁴

4 To^c give subtilty⁵ to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion.⁶

5 A^d wise man will hear, and will increase learning; and ^aa man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels:

robbery, or any other wickedness, abhor their counsels and flee from their company: 16. For, being set on mischief themselves, if they once entangle you, they will perpetually hurry you from one horrid crime to another. 17. And while they lay snares for others whom they reckon rash and inconsiderate, themselves, like silly birds, rush into courses, of which the dangerous issue might be easily perceived: 18. And, in the end, all their pains and cunning to undo others bring ruin upon themselves from the hand of God and men: 19. And all unrighteous methods of procuring wealth but issue in the destruction of the procurers.—20-23. While you shun and abhor the enticements of the wicked, listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, who, in his word and ordinances of the gospel, in the most public, affectionate, earnest, and importunate manner, calls you, however simple, ignorant, foolish, or even scornful, to forsake your wicked courses, and turn to him by faith and repentance, to receive his Spirit, freely given, and believe his words divinely manifested.

PALMYRA ROAD—LEADING FROM DAMASCUS TO TADMOR, THE CITY SOLOMON BUILT IN THE DESERT. [PROVERBS, i: 1.]—Solomon inherited from his father David a vast kingdom. His dominion stretched from the river Euphrates to the Mediterranean Sea, south to the river of Egypt, and north to near where the city of Aleppo now stands. Damascus was within his territory, and he built Palmyra, called Tadmor, in his day. This is a city in the wilderness, and that Solomon built it we learn from I. Kings, ix: 18, and II. Chronicles, viii: 4. Tadmor is between the Euphrates and Hamath, and is situated in an oasis of the desert. The celebrated Queen Zenobia had her capital and home in Palmyra. She built up a mighty kingdom which rivaled and defied the Roman power. She was captured and brought to Rome by the emperor Aurelian, A. D. 273. We give here as illustrating this first chapter of Proverbs, written by Solomon, a picture of a road leading out from Damascus to Tadmor, the city he built.

CHAPTER II.

¹ The study of wisdom tendeth to promote godliness, 10 and safety from evil company, 20 and to direct men in good and salutary ways.

MY son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee;

2 So that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding;

3 Yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice¹ for understanding;

4 If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures;

5 Then shalt thou understand the fear of the LORD, and find the knowledge of God.

6 For the LORD giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding.

7 He layeth up sound wisdom for the righteous: he is a buckler to them that walk uprightly.

8 He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints.

9 Then shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path.²

10 ¶ When wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul,

11 Discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee;

12 To deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that speaketh froward things;

13 Who leave the paths of uprightness, to walk in the ways of darkness;

14 Who rejoice to do evil, and delight in the frowardness of the wicked;

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1-5. And for your excitement and encouragement, know assuredly, my children, that if you entertain, receive, and lay up in your heart the instructions and directions which I now give you; if you earnestly study, and importunately pray for, the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and of all true and spiritual wisdom and knowledge in him, as infinitely more precious, useful, and desirable than all the treasures on earth, then you shall, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, happily obtain your desire, and be enabled and directed to know, obey, fear, love, worship, and serve God in a proper and truly acceptable manner. 6-9. For as wisdom and every other blessing is the free gift of God, he in his Word hath revealed, and by his Spirit bestows it upon men, and gives them a true and spiritual knowledge of himself and his ways. He hath in store, and is always ready to bestow upon such as ask it, true, solid, and substantial wisdom. And while he instructs and directs, he, by his almighty providence, infallibly preserves from soul-ruining mischiefs such as walk in a sincere, candid, and upright manner. He guides and enables the lovers of holiness to persevere in their integrity according to the rules of his Word, and preserves them from being drawn aside from it or endangered in it. And in seeking wisdom from him, you shall come to understand his righteousness and wisdom in all his administrations, and be enabled to imitate him in everything truly holy and virtuous. 10. And if Jesus Christ, the spiritual knowledge of divine things, and the power of practical godliness, have once been admitted to your heart and into your affections, 11-15. These will tend to preserve you from the crafty and ruinous seduction, either of subtle men, who, having apostatized from everything good, walk and delight in the perplexed ways of vice, and in making others as wicked as themselves, drawing them aside, and entangling them in courses directly contrary to their own true interest, safety, conscience, or reason; 16. Or of light and lewd women, unworthy to be reckoned Israelites, who set themselves, by all the arts of flattery, to decoy such as you into whoredom; 17. Perfidiously alienating their affections and persons from their own husbands, and disregarding the solemn vows made to them at marriage; 18. And who really love no one, but promote the death and eternal damnation of all such as cultivate any familiarity with them. 19. Very few who are once ensnared into their impure embraces are ever, by the grace of God, recovered to a penitent, chaste, and virtuous life on earth, or to everlasting glory in heaven.—20-22. And, moreover, while you are preserved from the ruinous infection of these wicked seducers, you shall be enabled to follow the example of the holy patriarchs and prophets; and, in consequence of this, shall happily dwell in this promised land of Canaan, and inherit the spiritual and everlasting felicity prefigured by it.—While these wicked seducers and their followers shall, after a short-lived flourish of prosperity, be furiously driven from this land and earth, and cast into the woe and depths of hell.

Ver. 4. Pearls are brought up from the depths of the sea; gold is washed from the earth and sands; silver is dug from the deep and dark mine; gems are extricated from the solid rock; the relics of antiquity are separated from rubbish and ruins—and shall the unsearchable riches of Christ be expected on the surface, as the reward of the indolent, or the discovery of accident? No. The believer searches in study of the Word, in study of the ways of Providence, in study of his own heart, in the depths of sovereign grace and eternal love—and discovers those treasures that lie hid from the wise and prudent, but which God by his Spirit reveals unto babes. C.

Ver. 9. Understand righteousness. It should never be forgotten that there is but one righteousness that can ever be discovered, 'the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Ro. 3. 10, 22. C.

Ver. 12. Men, evil in heart and froward in speech: for in the heart originate all evil things, and out of the abundance of an evil heart the mouth speaketh, Mat. 12. 34. C.

Ver. 17. A woman who has violated her marriage vow is here exhibited. Faithless to God, faithless to man—the perjured wanton is at once the original and the emblem of all that is most seductive, dangerous, and deadly. But to view the passage as a mere warning against a wicked woman, were to narrow it far within the limits of its full meaning. She is the emblem of that heathen idolatry by which the spirit is seduced from God, and immersed in sensuality; and she is the emblem of that seductive apostasy in the nominal Christian church which is called Babylon—with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and whose judgment, though it linger, will come in one hour, Re. 18. 9, 10. 3 We attend to all the exercises of true religion. The Lord is ready to bless such as are diligent with great success; and usually bestows upon them remarkable instruction, satisfaction, and protection. There is need of real religion to season and rule our heart; and of God's special preservation and our utmost caution while we live in this world, where men of corrupt principles, and women of treacherous and corrupt practices, so greatly abound. In their sinful courses such are generally obstinate, active, and crafty. Ensnaring are their enticements, and dangerous and ordinarily ruinous their connections; and few, once entangled in their wickedness, ever seriously repent, or turn to Jesus Christ for life and salvation. Happy then are they who are delivered from them, and enabled to walk as truly pious and circumspect. Godliness has the promise of this life and of that which is to come. Even now the saints alone have a blessed portion on earth; and at last they only shall inhabit the new earth, into which no wicked person shall ever enter.

4 CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. Let me therefore again entreat you, my dear children, to receive, and rivet in your judgment, memory, will, and affections, the counsels and commands which I now give, that you may practise them in your lives: thus shall your temporal life be long, healthful, and prosperous; be attended with a pleasant life of grace here, and followed by an eternal life of glory hereafter. 3, 4. And while you live by a cordial, constant, and assured faith in the mercy and faithfulness of God, pledged in his Word, study always, as your great honour, to imitate him in kindness, compassion, and uprightness: thus shall you be highly respected and honoured, and shall prudently order your affairs both before God and men. 5, 6. Always, by faith in his spiritual promises and relations, depend wholly on God for strength, direction, and success in your undertakings, and never upon your own knowledge or carnal prudence. In every undertaking believe and depend on his overruling power, observe his directions, and implore and wait for his favour and blessing, and he shall guide you in all

7, 8. Never indulge a conceit of your own knowledge or wisdom, as if it were sufficient to direct you in the easiest matters: but under the influence of a holy and filial awe of and regard to God, avoid with care whatever he has forbidden in his law: as that is the way to promote the health, strength, and comfort of both soul and body in time and eternity. 9, 10. In just gratitude to God, who has bestowed all that you have upon you, make conscience of employing your estates in works of piety, for the maintenance of his worship, and of charity to his poor, and of justice to all men: so shall his blessing abundantly increase them in everything useful and comfortable. 11, 12. Never overlook or contemn the afflictions which you meet with, as if they were trifles, or happened by chance; and never grow weary of them as an intolerable burden; and take any unlawful course to remove them; but kindly receive and submit to them as the corrections of a kind and gracious Father, in which he manifests his distinguished love to and care for your souls.—13-18. Thrice happy is the man who through much tribulation, and with much care and pains, obtains the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that is in and by him. This is infinitely preferable to everything gainful, comely, precious, or profitable on earth. By this we are secured in all the real blessings of this present life and of that which is to come. In cleaving to Jesus, and walking in his ordinances and laws, the most delightful comforts and pleasures, the most blessed tranquillity of mind and conscience, the most happy success of affairs, and eternal rest with God in glory, are to be enjoyed.—Immortal, quickening, and invigorating is the satisfaction enjoyed by every one who earnestly embraces his person, receives his instructions, and steadfastly walks in his ways. 19, 20. And no wonder that Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that are hid in him, should be so profitable, pleasant, and comfortable, when by him, and in the exercise of his infinite wisdom, God formed, founded, and settled the heavens, and earth, and seas, and all that is therein, and makes the fountains to pour forth streams for the nourishment of animals, and the clouds to drop down dews and rains for the nourishment of plants, corn, and grass.—21-26. Be it therefore your earnest care to fix these my instructions in your heart, and to keep them always before your eyes, as the means of obtaining true and profitable knowledge and prudence. You will find them infallible promoters of true life, and honour, and comfort, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. By means hereof, you, by the blessing of God, shall prosper in your labours, and be kept from falling into sin or danger; and under his protection you shall enjoy the most safe and pleasant rest and refreshment. No reports of sudden and approaching danger, or of desolating judgments, appointed for or effected by the wicked, need in the least terrify you; for the Almighty JEHOVAH, in whom you have placed all your trust and confidence, shall support, protect, and preserve you from danger. 27, 28. Never delay the payment of just debts, or the giving to the Lord, or to the poor, beyond the first opportunity afforded you, as you know not if ever Providence will give you another. 29. Never contrive mischief against any: especially against such as depend on your equity and kindness. 30. Never be quarrelsome and contentious: and especially to such as have done you no injury. 31, 32. Never let the prosperity and wealth of oppressors tempt you to wish yourselves in their condition, or to imitate them in their injurious conduct; for wilful and obstinate oppressors are infinitely detested and hated of God; but his secret counsels and comforts are vouchsafed to such as walk uprightly and honestly. 33. Evil-doers, however great, and all that they have, are under the destructive influence of God's curse; but good men, being under the influence of his favour and blessing, may be happy in the meanest condition upon earth. 34. God will certainly at last expose proud mockers of religion and virtue to scorn and contempt; but will render such as are meek and humble highly respected and honoured. 35. And though persons truly wise unto salvation may for a time be abusively reproached and contemned, yet they shall, in the most free and fixed manner, enjoy honour from God and men at last;

whereas contempt and misery are all the promotion that wicked men, ignorant of God and regardless of their true interest, shall ever attain.

Ver. 2. The fifth is the first commandment with promise; which ever in this life receives a literal fulfilment, as far as it serves for God's glory and the good of his people: also a spiritual fulfilment: for believers always count their days by the continuance of goodness and mercy; and their life has become truly long from their desire to depart and be with Christ. But hereafter the promise is fully realized in all the blessings of life and immortality. C.

Ver. 5. Trust in the Lord. Trust in the Lord's word, whatever hath been thy own previous opinion: trust in his will, whatever hath been thy previous inclinations: trust in his promise, whatever hath been thy own previous experience: and trust in his guidance, whatever may be thy doubts, difficulties, or fears. C.

Ver. 16. Some think this description of temporal blessings is confined to the Jewish, and not literally extended to the Christian dispensation. This, with the exception of the promise of possessing Canaan, is an unfounded distinction: for godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, 1 Ti. 4. 8. The true meaning of the verse lies in referring its promise to the gift of eternal life, and the acquisition of the 'unsearchable riches of Christ.' C.

Ver. 17. Ways of pleasantness. A way is rendered pleasant, (1) by health to journey and enjoy; (2) by the smoothness of the path; (3) by the beauty of the prospect; (4) by the safety of the country; (5) by the agreeableness of companions; (6) by the prospect of a cheerful and happy rest and welcome at the end: all these meet when Jesus is the way. C.

Ver. 22. Life unto thy soul. The life of the body is supported by food, digestion, and nutrition, which eventuate in health and enjoyment. The life of the soul is supported by the bread that cometh down from heaven; is accompanied with 'hunger and thirst after righteousness,' which is followed by 'growth in grace,' and eventuates in 'the peace of God' with 'joy unspeakable and full of glory.' C.

Ver. 25. Be not afraid of sudden fear. 'Sudden fear,' or what is commonly called a panic, with 'rumours of wars,' 'dire portents and omens,' are continually disturbing the minds of men. But by all, the believer in Jesus remains unmoved. His Redeemer liveth—his sins are forgiven—he is accepted of God—he inherits the promises—Jesus is with him in the ship, and he trembles not in any storm that his Father may commission to try his faith. C.

Ver. 32. His secret is with the righteous. This does not signify any secret information that God gives to the one, which he withholds it from the other (for the grace of God hath appeared unto all men, teaching them that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, they should live soberly, righteously, and godly); but it signifies God's residence in the hearts of believers, which this world can neither see, imagine, nor admit; and that secret comfort which he administers to them by his promises and Spirit, in the midst of all the public trials of which they are partakers, and of the wicked: but he blesseth the habitation of the just.

34 Surely^a he scorneth the scornors: but he giveth grace unto the lowly.

35 The^a wise shall inherit glory: but shame shall be the promotion of fools.⁹

n I have led thee

12 When^a thou goest, thy steps shall not be straitened; and when thou runnest, thou shalt not stumble.

13 Take^b fast hold of instruction; let her not go: keep her; for she is thy life.

14 ¶ Enter^c not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men.⁷

15 Avoid^d it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away.

16 For^e they sleep not, except they have done mischief; and their sleep is taken away, unless they cause some to fall.

17 For^f they eat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence.

18 But^g the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

19 The^h way of the wicked is as darkness: they know not at what they stumble.⁸

20 ¶ My son, ⁱattend to my words; incline thine ear unto my sayings:

21 Let them not depart from thine eyes; keep them in the midst of thine heart:

22 For^j they are life unto those that find them, and health^k to all their flesh.

23 ¶ Keep^l thy heart with all diligence;¹ for out of it are the^m issues of life.²

24 Putⁿ away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lips^o put far from thee.

25 Let^p thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee.

26 Ponder^q the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established.⁴

27 Turn^r not to the right hand nor to the left; remove thy foot from evil.

that secret acquittal which he reports to their consciences, in the midst of all the public calumnies they may be condemned to underlie. C.

Ver. 34. Give^h grace unto the lowly. It does not signify that God gives grace to men who have become lowly, previous to grace, or without grace, by a mere effort of unrenewed nature: but that he first gives lowliness, which is a grace of the Spirit, and then, when he has already sown the seed, continues to water and give the increase. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Real religion has a glorious and blessed tendency to render men happy in themselves, and blessings to all around them. And those who neglect and despise it are in general mean-spirited, foolish, and self-ruining wretches, dishonourers of God, and plagues to mankind. But great is the shame that the professors of religion so little conform their lives to the excellent rules thereof, that they so little exemplify them in their behaviour and conduct. And comely would the church of God appear if that regard to God's law, faith in him, devotion, resignation to his will, diligence in his work, and that truth, mercy, equity, peacefulness, humility, and prudence towards men, required in his Word, were duly exercised.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1-3. My dear young friends, attend to and receive these affectionate, wholesome, and profitable instructions which I give you: and while you live, earnestly practise the same. They are the very same which I myself, as a darling son, and intended successor on the throne, received from my pious and affectionate father David. 4-9. He, in the most careful and earnest manner, instructed me in my childhood, and begged me to fix his instructions and directions in my heart, and practise them in my life, as the means of attaining true and lasting felicity. He earnestly recommended to me the getting of Jesus Christ, and the true knowledge and fear of God in him, and cleaving thereto, as the grand and effectual means of preservation from sin and danger, and of obtaining happiness and honour both in time and eternity.* 10-13. As you wish to live long and prosperously, receive, and observe in your practice, these my instructions. I do not direct you into paths of folly, fraud, or perverseness, but into a course of wisdom, integrity, and virtue; in which you may prosecute business without any entangling difficulties, and with ease, despatch, and certain success. Carefully fix these instructions in your mind and heart, and persevere in the practice of them, as on this your happiness in time and eternity depends. 14-19. With the utmost care and abhorrence avoid the company and course of wicked men, and every temptation thereto; and with the greatest speed and earnestness flee from it if you have been entangled; for such is the malignity of their dispositions, that they can take no rest till they execute their villanous intentions, and are perpetually disturbing themselves in order to ruin others. They neither have, nor desire, any other provision to live on than what they get by unjust and violent courses. And while good men daily grow in knowledge, grace, and holiness of conversation, till they arrive at perfection, wicked men, amidst gross ignorance, error, confusion, crimes, and wretchedness, rush on heedlessly till they are plunged into everlasting misery. 20-27. And in order to retain in heart, and practise in life, these my excellent instructions, which are a source of lasting and complete happiness to all who improve them aright, watch over your heart, and keep your mind, conscience, will, affections, thoughts, and desires, with uncommon earnestness, as from these do originally issue the eternal happiness or misery of mankind. Resolutely shun all impure or wicked discourse; and never let any corrupt, false, filthy, idle, passionate, or scornful communication proceed from your lips. Let your mind and thoughts be fixed only upon the right paths of holiness and virtue, that you may walk in them without ever turning from them; and never let your eyes, by fixing on improper objects, seduce you into sin or danger. Before you fix upon any action, carefully examine whether it be agreeable to God's law, and answerable to the end for which you intend it; and let every step you take in life be rightly ordered, according to the rule of his Word. And, by shunning extremes on every hand, labour to avoid everything offensive or injurious either to God or men.

Ver. 18. Even the private path of the just (the believer justified by faith, Ro. iii.) is as the shining light. It shineth more and more before God, in faith and love; more and more before men, in diligence and zeal; more and more before the church, in knowledge and edification; more and more before God, in humility and holiness. C.

Ver. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence. Keep it with the diligence of a guardian, that would fence it against intrusion or assault; with the diligence of a servant, that would attend to its necessities and requirements; with the diligence of a steward keeping all accounts of expenditure and gain; and with the diligence of a physician, attending to its symptoms, and prescribing for its diseases; and with the diligence of a friend, taking equal pleasure in bearing with its infirmities, sympathizing with its sorrows, relieving its necessities, and participating in its joys. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is the greatest honour, as well as duty, of parents carefully to instruct their children: and it may be infinitely useful after both instructors and instructed are laid in the dust. Unspeakably excellent is Jesus Christ, his grace, and holy religion. Multitudes of powerful reasons engage us to remember and cleave to them: and to love, delight in, or exalt them. Yet how apt are our corrupt hearts to ensnare us into fellowship with wicked persons or practices, or even to render us intent on, and delighted in, the most cruel and barbarous conduct! But wide is the difference in time, and especially in eternity, between the way of holiness and that of iniquity. While the saints gradually grow up in grace here, and live in endless felicity hereafter, the wicked blindly rush forward into everlasting misery. Great circumspection, care, diligence, and watchfulness are therefore necessary in denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and in living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1, 2. And, my children, what I am just going to say requires your particular and most serious consideration, that you may be able to preserve yourselves from the most subtle and dangerous deceits, and, by your pious and prudent discourses and admonitions, prevent the ensnarement of others. 3-6. For, astonishing are the arts, and inconceivable the enchanting flatteries, of whorish women, as if nothing but the most pure and exquisite pleasures were to be enjoyed in fellowship with them: but dreadful is the real issue thereof, in the impairing of men's health, strength, estates, and reputation; and in remorse of conscience, wretched death, and endless damnation. And to prevent your repentance and escape from their snares, they will turn themselves into ten thousand forms, that they may work on your several humours. 7-14. Let me, therefore, with the utmost affection, earnestness, and solemnity, beseech you to avoid such women, and all, even the most distant, approaches to familiarity with them, as a dangerous, an infernal plague; lest you forfeit your credit, and sacrifice your vigour of life to base and cruel wretches, who labour to ruin you to every intent, and for ever; and lest your wealth, and the fruit of your care and labour, should by their means be transferred from you to others; and when your substance is gone, and your body pining to death, under horrible diseases, you should have nothing left you but inexorable torment of conscience, reflecting upon the faithful admonitions of parents and teachers which you have contemned, and the miseries you do, and must for ever, undergo. 15-19. And to prevent your having the smallest inclination to the base and polluting pleasures of whoredom, marry; and in a wife, wholly your own, enjoy and rest contented with the pure, chaste, and honourable pleasures of the marriage state. Take pleasure in having children by her, sporting in the streets, or dispersed into families. Have children by her alone, and which you are sufficiently certain are really your own. Make your wife happy, by an affectionate cleaving to her only: and take pleasure in her innocent and delightful company. While you live together, let her always be amiable in your eyes; cherish her with the most tender affection; and in her embraces, and tender regard, always take such satisfaction as to prevent your affections in the least fixing upon another in her stead. 20, 21. And when you can so fully, pleasantly, securely, constantly, innocently, and honourably enjoy such pleasures in a pious and affectionate wife, why risk everything dear, to enjoy the base, dishonourable, destructive, and damning pleasures of whoredom—especially when the all-seeing God witnesses your most secret conduct, and will quickly reward or punish you according to the nature of it? 22, 23. Nor shall whoremongers and adulterers long escape his insupportable justice;—their own guilt and lust shall for ever bind and hold them fast under the power of his wrath. To punish their contempt of former instructions and warnings, God shall abandon them to impenitence, and permit them madly to rush forward, through increasing crimes, into endless damnation.

Ver. 2. Knowledge. The knowledge of the evil of sin in time and eternity; the knowledge of God in Christ, reconciling the world to himself; the knowledge of regeneration, whereby men are renewed in heart, speech, and behaviour; the knowledge of glory, into which fornicators and adulterers can never enter. C.

Ver. 6. Movable. Like the shifting sands at the estuary of rivers, that move in a storm, and destroy many vessels before their new positions can be sufficiently ascertained. But let it never be forgot, that whilst this wicked and seducing woman is a real character, she is also an emblem of heathen idolatry and Christian apostasy; that like her, lead the soul away from God, and promising life, lead down to the ways of destruction and death. See note on ch. 2. 17. C.

Ver. 19. The loving hind and pleasant roe. The affection of many quadrupeds and birds—nay, of some animals of the deep—for their young, presents an instructive lesson, and often a killing reproof, to rational, immortal, and accountable beings. But however great the evil and the shame, when human beings become unfaithful to one another—how much greater when the harlotry of error seduces the church from her Saviour—when 'the ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, God's people do not consider?' Is. 1. 3. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is shameful and shocking that mankind should be inclined, nay, so much inclined, to a sin so base, so beastly, and ruinous, as whoredom.—That even in the sex where modesty ought to shine with distinguished lustre, wretches should be found who impudently entice to it! Surely it must be very absurd to prefer the pleasures of it, attended with miseries innumerable, to the innocent, the sanctified joys and honours of the marriage state! But no wonder that they who atheistically discredit the omniscience and justice of God, and live thoughtless of their future account, should proceed to the most infamous lengths in wickedness. Yet let them remember, that in the most miserable manner, correspondent to their sins, they shall at last be hurried into endless fire!

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1-5. And that no occasion may be given for family contentions or ruin, let me admonish you to beware of all rash engagements in suretyship, especially for such whose honesty or ability you know not; but if you have rashly entangled and enslaved yourself by such obligations, endeavour, as quickly as possible, by every humble and persuasive method you can think of; nay, struggle as for life, to disengage yourself, by pressing the debtor to pay what he owes, or the creditor to acquit you of your bond.—6-11. Meanwhile, never indulge yourself in sloth, and want of provident care; but learn, from those puny insects the ants, to labour diligently in your calling, and carefully improve every opportunity of honestly providing for yourself and your family: and remember that, if that inclination to idleness and sloth, so common to mankind, be indulged by you, whether in greater or smaller degrees, unexpected and at last extreme poverty shall irresistibly come upon you.—12-15. Remember too, that it is the property of persons vile and wicked to accustom themselves to profane, blasphemous, proud, passionate, lewd, or reproachful discourse, or by signs made with their eyes, feet, or fingers to stir up others to mischief. The heart of such being filled with perverse inclinations, they are perpetually contriving mischief, and stirring up hatred and contention among their neighbours: but suddenly shall their villany and wickedness issue in their irretrievable infamy and ruin. 16-19. And indeed proud looks, lying tongues, murderous hands, hearts given to mischievous contrivances, feet given to a speedy execution of injurious designs, perjured persons, and sowers of discord among friends or neighbours, are distinguished objects of God's indignation.—20-22. Let me therefore again press you to attend to, highly esteem, and carefully practise, those divine instructions which have been tendered to you by your parents. This will be of great use to direct, preserve, and comfort you in your whole labours of life. 23, 24. For the law of God, as a lamp, guides in adversity, and, as the light of the sun, directs and comforts in prosperity; and the reproofs of his Word are excellent means of preserving from ruin, and leading to true happiness; and are particularly useful to preserve from being deluded by the flattering speeches and enticements of lewd women, those sinks of wickedness and plagues of mankind. 25-29. As you regard your temporal or eternal welfare, never gaze on the beauty or fine attire of such: never let their wanton and enticing looks engage you to the most distant desire after their dangerous embraces; for if once they ensnare you, they will never quit their hold till they have reduced you to extreme beggary, or to a miserable and ignominious death. You may more safely take fire into your bosom, or walk upon burning coals, than intermeddle, however privately or transiently, with a whorish woman, particularly if either party be married. 30-33. If one merely steal to fill his hungry belly, he is not exposed to shame or punishment; and if it be found that he has stolen more, it is only required that he should make complete restitution according to the law, which may perhaps amount to all that he is worth. But he who commits adultery with a woman can have no necessity for it, but acts through mere folly and wickedness, and so exposes himself to the loss of his life by the magistrates, as well as to eternal damnation from the hand of God. He exposes himself to bloody quarrels, and renders himself irrecoverably infamous. And though the civil magistrate should wickedly spare his life, yet it is exposed to the fury of a justly enraged husband, who will regard no penitential submissions or entreaties, and accept no gifts as the ransom of it.

Ver. 1. This is a passage of great practical difficulty. Does it, by implication, altogether forbid the aid of suretyship to friends? This cannot be; for in many instances such suretyship is indispensable. Does it, then, covertly condemn merely such rash and inconsiderate engagements as arise from an undue facility of temper, rather than from a deliberate calculation of duty? Such covert insinuation of a principle is inconsistent with the plainness of Scripture. With great deference, the following slight and well thought passage to thy friend, see Ge. 24.54. This makes the object of the passage to be a warning against any neglect of a friend's interest (for which we have become accountable), from any undue presumptuous draft upon his friendship—a most necessary warning; for in practice there are many who will neglect their own interests, and the interests of their best friends, for the éclat that may result from their attention and liberality to strangers. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Greatly advantageous, even to the outward interests of persons, families, and nations, is an exact obedience to God's commandments. And it is sinful and foolish to ruin our estates or families by engaging for other people's debts: but infamously wicked are those debtors who exert not themselves to the utmost to relieve their sureties. Great care ought to be taken of our outward property. In respect of it we are but God's stewards, and ought to lay it out and bring it in according to his directions. The amazing instinct which God hath given to some animals, and their conduct, shame the slothful of mankind. Such sluggards are very averse to be roused to their work, spiritual or temporal. If one degree of indolence be denied them, they would gradually enjoy a lesser: but poverty in a quick, irresistible, and ruinous manner, comes to such at last. With alarming earnestness do sinners practise iniquity, and make every power of their soul, or member of their body, instrumental therein. And many things in heart, in lip, in life, are detected by God, which are overlooked as almost innocent by

CHAPTER VII.

1 Solomon persuadeth to a sincere and kind familiarity with wisdom.
6 In an example of his own experience, he sheweth the cunning of a lewd woman, 22 and the desperate simplicity of a young wanton.
24 He dissuadeth from such dangerous courses.

MY son,¹ keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee.

2 Keep^b my commandments, and live; and my law^c as the apple of thine eye.

6 ¶ For^g at the window of my house^h I looked through my casement, 15 Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to seek thy face, and I have found thee.

men. With what ardent love ought we to regard the word of God as our enlightening instructor and regulating law! It is necessary to receive, retain, and improve it as a powerful mean to preserve us from fleshly lusts, which war against both body and soul. But terrible and fatal snares are the flattering words and looks of whorish and light women. It is impossible to avoid destruction if once we are entangled by them. And it is shocking that so many indulge themselves in a crime so infamous and destructive.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1-5. My dear young friends, let me again press upon your consciences to lay up my advices and instructions in your judgment, heart, and memory; and carefully, tenderly, and readily to observe and practise them. Make yourselves familiar with Jesus Christ, and his spiritual instructions, as the most powerful means of preservation from the ensnaring arts and flatteries of whorish women, which is a privilege of infinite importance. 6-9. For, from my own window I observed a thoughtless young top sauntering under night in the streets, and in a stately manner walking towards a corner which these infamous strumpets used to haunt. 10-20. There, one dressed in a light and whorish manner, and extremely skilled in the arts of enticement,—one extremely talkative, ready to brawl with her husband, given to idle visiting, and gadding about to places of dissipation and concourse,—met him, caught him in her arms and kissed him, and in an impudent manner told him that, being a devout lady, she had that very day been offering thank-offerings to God; and being to feast upon her share of the flesh thereof, she had solicitously sought him to take a part of it, and had happily found him;—and that she had decked and perfumed her bed in the most engaging manner,—in which they might riot all night in exquisite pleasures, without any danger, as the silly fellow called her husband was gone a long journey, had a great deal of business to transact, and would not return till the full moon. 21-23. Notwithstanding his showing some aversion at first, she, by her fair pretences and flattering speeches, quickly com-

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The fame, 6 and evidence of wisdom. 10 The excellency, 12 the nature, 15 the power, 18 the riches, 22 and the eternity of wisdom. 32 Wisdom is to be desired for the blessedness it bringeth.

DOTH not wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice?¹

2 She standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths:

3 She crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors:

4 Unto² you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O ye simple, understand wisdom; and ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

6 ¶ Hear, for I will speak of excellent things; and the opening of my lips shall be right things.

7 For³ my mouth shall speak truth; and wickedness is an abomination to my lips.⁴

8 All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing froward⁵ or perverse in them.

9 They⁶ are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

10 ¶ Receive⁷ my instruction, and not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold.

11 For⁸ wisdom is better than rubies; and pelled him to follow her, as willingly, and no less stupidly, than an ox goeth to the slaughter, or a madman to the stocks,—never thinking of anything but pleasure, till the enraged husband sheath his sword in his bowels, or the judgments of God accomplish his irretrievable ruin!—24-27. Let me therefore beseech you, my dear young men, whom I unfeignedly regard, diligently to observe and practise these warnings which I have repeatedly given you. Never indulge the smallest inclination towards such women; never listen to their enticements; never indulge the smallest fellowship or familiarity with such; never hope to be safe in, or to return from, such courses; for many, even of those noted in valour and wisdom, have been totally ruined in reputation, estate, body, and soul by such women; and fellowship with them is the certain road to a miserable death and eternal damnation.

Ver. 14. Peace-offerings. The law of God, De. 12. 6, 7, adjudged the greater part of the peace-offering to the offerer as a feast for himself and his friends. And here, by a perverse interpretation, the beneficence of religion is made a cloak and incentive to sin.—Note. And let every Christian note it well: to turn all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.

12 ¶ I^a wisdom dwell with prudence,⁴ and find out knowledge of witty inventions.

13 The^a fear of the LORD is to hate evil: pride,⁹ and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate.

14 Counsel² is mine, and sound wisdom: I am understanding; I have strength.⁵

15 ¶ By^a me kings reign, and princes decree justice.

16 By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.

17 I^a love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me.

18 Riches^a and honour are with me; yea, durable riches and righteousness.

19 My^a fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold; and my revenue than choice silver.

20 I^a lead⁶ in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment;

21 That I may cause those that love me to inherit substance; and I will fill their treasures.

22 ¶ The^a LORD possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old.⁷

23 I^a was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.

24 When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water.

the grace of God into licentiousness is a constant inclination in man, and a constant temptation of Satan. Let believers watch and pray that they follow neither. C.

Ver. 18. It is thus that by the misapplication of words, the world, the flesh, and the devil continue to seduce and destroy. Love is an attribute, a name for God himself; yet, under this name, the seducer covers her own perjury, her victim's lewdness, and the disregard and enmity of both to God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is necessary to love, search, and meditate on God's law day and night; and to make it the constant food of our heart and standard of our life. Then should we find therein the most sanctifying virtue. Magistrates and ministers should carefully inspect the people committed to their charge! And there is need of frequent and fervent prayers to God for our friends and neighbours, as we know not in what guilt fearful temptations may involve them if not overcome. The devil quickly finds business for idle and unseasonable saunterers, especially if young. And when women are once addicted to flaunting, loose, and gaudy apparel, and to wheedling in love matters, and are extremely talkative, and given to an unsettled and dissipated course, it will require no great pains to make harlots of them. Terribly base and impudent these women become who have thrown off the restraints of modesty peculiar to their sex. And sad is the case when husbands and wives are glad to be rid of one another's company. It is shameful, wicked, and ruinous, when Satan and his abominable agents or lusts are, in days of youth, preferred to Jesus Christ and his grace. But fearful and speedy destruction, from the crime itself, or from the hand of God or man, awaits the whorish adulterer. Surely then we should be solicitous to improve the falls and miseries of others, as a warning for us to take heed, lest, in the same thoughtless and inconsiderate manner, we hurry ourselves into everlasting ruin.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1-11. And why, to your ruin, should you listen to the flattering enticements of whorish women, when Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, by himself and his messengers, in the most open and earnest manner, calls you, and every one of mankind, even the most simple and foolish, to the study of true and spiritual wisdom;—to listen to, consider, and believe the excellent, pure, holy, substantial, faithful, precious, and infinitely useful oracles of his Word: 12-31. And in order to enforce his call, and recommend his instructions, represents himself as the infinitely wise God, the source of all wisdom and prudence; the infinitely Holy One, who detests everything proud, polluted, or perverse;—and the Almighty God, able to execute all his purposes, and by whose deputed authority all the magistrates on earth govern their subjects;—the infinite lover and rich rewarder of all that seek him, particularly in youth;—the inexhaustible portion and unerring guide of all those who receive him by faith:—the eternal and only begotten Son of JEHOVAH, appointed to be our Mediator;—the almighty Maker of all things in heaven and earth;—and who, from his infinite and peculiar love to mankind, took a distinguished pleasure in forming the earth as a theatre, whereon he should appear, save, and hold intimate fellowship with the sons and daughters of Adam. 32-36. On account of all which excellencies and kindness he, in the most earnest and condescending manner, entreats and charges you to hear, receive, and practically observe his instructions, attend his ordinances, and receive himself in them, as the free gift of God, and as the only mean of true and everlasting happiness;—and warns you, that if you refuse and hate him, you will infallibly and eternally ruin yourselves.

Ver. 1. He that would understand this, and similar passages, may consult Is. 11, 2, 3, where he will find the seven gifts of the Spirit enumerated as the endowments of Christ. And as every attribute of God is but a name for his being—so the forth-putting of every separate attribute is but an account of the actings of his being in that special view. Accordingly, 'wisdom and understanding' are here both used as titles of Christ—wisdom, to indicate his full comprehension of the interests and means of the house of God—understanding, to indicate his adequacy to sustain their weight, care, and management. C.

Ver. 5. Ye simple. This word is applied either to that singleness of heart that rejects the world and is persuaded of God, Ro. 16, 19, or that singleness of heart that rejects God and follows the world, Pr. 14, 15. Singleness is the original idea in both cases—the nature of that singleness is explained by its peculiar attributes, as it occurs. C.

Ver. 9. He that hath understanding, is not necessarily he that is learned; but he in whose heart the Word of God has been sown as a seed of life, and who has resisted and overcome the efforts of Satan to take it away, Mat. 13, 19. To such a one all the words of God are plain, because it is written, 'If any man will do his (the Father's) will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God,' Jn. 7, 17. C.

Ver. 12. Prudence implies foresight, forethought, and preparation for coming events. It is an attribute of God, Ep. 1, 8; and, rightly understood, a precious grace of the Spirit in man, Is. 52, 13.—Witty. This word is here used in the sense of ingenious, skilful. To the Spirit of God all human ingenuity is to be attributed, Ex. 31, 2, 3, the administration of whose gifts are all in the hands of Christ, the eternal Wisdom. C.

Ver. 18. Were further proof required that the Wisdom here speaking is Christ, it would here be furnished: none but he is righteous, Ro. 3, 10; 1 Jn. 2, 1; none but he has righteousness, Ro. 3, 22. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How public, earnest, and extensive are the calls of the gospel! Infinitely excellent is that Jesus Christ and his salvation therein exhibited and offered, and that religion which is therein prescribed. And happy, in the blessings of time and eternity, are those persons, families, and nations in which the knowledge of Christ and his truths prevail and reign! They are enriched with the fruits of his mediation, and filled with all the fulness of God. But is it not infinitely amazing, that God's eternal Son, the Creator and Preserver of all things, should have, from everlasting, entered into the room of, and fixed his thoughts, his delights upon, the children of men? Surely then he deserves our strictest attention, our earliest and strongest affection. And just and righteous is the sorest punishment which can be inflicted upon those self-ruiners who refuse him, and neglect and despise the ordinances of his grace. Let me consider this great Apostle and High-priest of my profession, this great ALL and IN ALL. Let my heart seek him early, earnestly, and above all things else. Let me love him, who first loved me, with my whole heart, soul, mind, and strength. Let me rejoice and delight in him as my exceeding joy, and all my consolation. Let me carefully attend his ordinances, watching daily at his gates, at the posts of his doors; and if I find him who is the great God my Saviour, and the eternal life, my pains will be infinitely more than rewarded.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1-5. And why enter the ruinous house or covet the ensnaring entertainment of a harlot, when the infinitely wise Jesus Christ, who is made of God unto us wisdom, hath framed, for his fellowship with men, a glorious church on earth and in heaven, fully supported by divine perfections, purposes, oracles, and offices; and hath prepared his own crucified self, his word, ordinances, and eternal felicities, d Wisdom is here exhibited as building a firm, beautiful, and perfect temple, where all her votaries may dwell in princely magnificence and security. It is a refuge from the world's vanities, an asylum from its persecutions, and a school for the acquisition of divine truth. Wisdom is Jesus Christ our great King; the temple is the true church: the seven pillars are the emblems of perfection and stability; the food and the wine represent Christian ordinances and teaching.

CHAPTER X.

From this chapter to the five-and-twentieth are sundry observations of moral virtues and their contrary vices.

THE Proverbs of Solomon. A wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.

2 Treasures of wickedness profit nothing: but righteousness delivereth from death.

3 The LORD will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish: but he casteth away the substance of the wicked.²

4 He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand: but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.³

5 He that gathereth in summer is a wise for the nourishment and satisfaction of sinful men; and in the gospel, by his faithful prophets, apostles, and ministers, earnestly invites and beseeches even the most weak, wicked, and besotted sinners of mankind to come by faith, and freely partake of his nourishing, strengthening, delightful, and satisfactory fullness and blessings? 6-12. Earnestly he admonishes you to avoid all unnecessary intimacy with wicked persons, as you regard your temporal or eternal happiness; as by it you cannot, even in attempting their reformation, justly expect to profit them, but may be sure of procuring hatred and infamy to yourselves;—and to cultivate familiarity with wise and serious persons, whom you may both profit and be profited by;—and to study true and experimental godliness, as the proper mean to render you truly happy in this world and in that which is to come; and solemnly warns you that you yourselves must reap the inexpressibly important fruits of your attention to or scornful rejection of his instructions.—13-18. And remember, as before God, that nothing more effectually renders men despisers of Christ and his blessings than fellowship with light and lewd women, or false teachers; who, ignorant of everything spiritually good, and extremely talkative, artfully and impudently seduce simple persons, who intend no such thing, to imagine that forbidden pleasures are peculiarly delightful. And, alas! few of those tempted by them seriously consider, that by such pleasures multitudes have already lost their lives, and are entered into the everlasting torments of hell.

Ver. 7. Blot. The shame of disappointed hopes, the blot of having cast what was holy before dogs, who turn again and rend the hand by which they have been fed, Mat. 7. 6. C.

Ver. 8. Reprove not a scorner. Why not reprove a scorner? Because Providence does not show that he is prepared to bear reproof. But deal with him in meekness; and pray for him in thine heart; and thus, and in this true and holy sense, become all things unto all men, that thou mayest save some, 1 Co. 9. 19-22. C.

Ver. 16. Whoso is simple. The seducer here employs the language of Wisdom, ver. 4, even as Satan employed the language of Scripture in his temptation of our Lord, Mat. 4. 6.—Note. It has ever been the custom of error and heresy to employ, nay, to extol Scripture language; while inwardly, often rejecting its authority, and always perverting its meaning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What great things Jesus Christ has done, and still does, for our salvation! O how unwilling is he that we should perish! Gloriously formed, and well supported and established, are his promise and church. Rich are his gospel provisions—his own flesh and blood, nay, all the fullness of God. And free and unencumbered with legal qualifications are his gospel calls. How absurd, insolent, and foolish are the scornful refusers thereof! For certain and just is their aggravated and everlasting ruin. And it is impossible to have fellowship with Christ, in grace or glory, and yet live in intimacy with wicked men. There is need of the utmost care, both in giving and taking reproofs. Fidelity in reproofs is the surest evidence of genuine friendship. None are too wise to learn, nor too good to amend. And they who rage at rebuke prove the weakness of their own understanding, as well as the want of grace. But, alas! what manifold temptations, suited to the taste of our corrupt hearts, are presented to us by Satan and his emissaries, to keep or draw us from Jesus Christ! And too many, through ignorance or inattention to the danger, comply therewith. But however sweet the pleasures of sin be in the mouth, they are bitter in the belly; they issue in endless torment and anguish.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. It is a great comfort to parents to see their children profiting by their instructions and examples, and growing up in wisdom, piety, and virtue. But it is a grief and burden to them when they are foolish, stubborn, and profligate. 2. Ill-gotten riches afford no solid comfort in life, but draw on a wasting or poisoning curse: but Jesus' glorious love, and a holy, just, and merciful conduct, procure safety and deliverance from the greatest dangers. 3. The Lord, who has all fullness in his hand, will always grant necessary supplies, for both soul and body, to them who are justified in Christ and live in a just and merciful manner. But he will deprive the wicked of their ill-gotten possessions by some stroke of his providence, or remove them from it by death. 4. Negligence and sloth, and even fraudulent methods of gain, bring men to poverty; but active diligence tends to enrich men both in temporals and spirituals. 5. To seize upon and improve opportunities of obtaining spiritual or temporal things, particularly in the time of youth, is a mark of true wisdom: but he that slothfully neglects them, brings misery and shame upon himself and his parents. 6. The justified in Christ are, to their everlasting honour and safety, blessed in him with all the blessings of time and eternity; and outward blessings often attend the just and merciful on earth. But their own iniquity shall violently overwhelm and confound those who wickedly defraud and oppress their neighbours. 7. The pious and virtuous shall, at least after death, be remembered with honour and praise, men blessing God for their good example and useful conversation; but wicked livers shall either be forgotten or remembered with abhorrence. 8. They who are truly wise will thankfully receive and practise laws from God or good advices from men: but self-conceited persons, who will not learn of others, but love to hear themselves talk, shall bring themselves into contempt, sin, and misery: nay, into hell. 9. He who in dealing with God and men walks in candour, simplicity, and godly sincerity, is safe under the divine protection in his way to eternal life, and avoids manifold miseries and snares in this world; but he who indulges himself in hypocrisy towards God, and in inconstancy and deceit towards men, shall be detected and made a public reproach. 10. He who under pretence of kindness betrays his neighbour, and by signs mocks him or tempts others to injure him, is a common grievance, and shall at last become miserable; but a noisy and perpetual talker ruins himself by his words, and deserves to be beaten for his impertinence. 11. Good discourse always tends to the profit, comfort, and refreshment of those that receive it; but wicked men, to their own ruin, pour forth virulent and mischievous language; or, if their language be fair, it but conceals the mischief which they intend to effect when opportunity serves. 12. Where there is hatred in the heart, almost everything; however innocent, will be used to raise quarrels or disturbances: but love overlooks affronts and injuries, pacifies the mind of the injured, and composes contentions for which too much ground had been given. 13. Where wisdom abounds in the heart, the discourse of the lips will be sensible and 23 It^w is as sport to a fool to do mischief: but a man of understanding hath wisdom.

24 The^x fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him: but the desire of the righteous shall be granted.⁴

edifying; but nothing but sore afflictions here, or the torments of hell hereafter, can bring obstinate fools to any serious reflection. 14. They who know the value of true wisdom labour to enlarge their knowledge, and to keep it up till they have proper opportunities for using it: but fools rashly blab out what tends to their own or others' ruin. 15. Riches make men confident and secure, and even protect them against manifold injuries in this world; whereas poverty depresses men's spirits, and exposes them to injury and abuse. 16. The industry of the righteous in outward things issues in the comfortable maintenance of himself and others; and his care for his soul issues in life spiritual and eternal: but whatever a wicked man has by inheritance, or by his own acquirement, hardens him in sin, and is abused to gratify his sinful lusts. 17. He is in the way to eternal life who receives, lays up in his heart, and practises the instructions of God's Word, and readily regards advices, and even reproofs, given him by others: but he who neglects to give reproof, encourages men in their mistakes; and he who refuses to take and improve instructions and reproofs, obstinately rushes upon his own destruction. 18. He who conceals his hatred by great professions of friendship before one's face, and he who artfully vents slander behind one's back, is, with all his cunning, an impious fool in God's reckoning, and his wickedness shall be publicly exposed. 19. Even in much speaking there are ordinarily to be found words idle or wicked. It is therefore prudent to be sparing in our words, and to consider well both when, and where, and what, and how we speak. 20, 21. Prudent and pious discourse is pure and substantial: it edifies, instructs, and nourishes the hearers: but the heart of the wicked, being only evil, and that continually, is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; nothing good can proceed from it; but they persist and perish in the devices of their own foolishness, neither knowing nor caring to know the way of life and peace. 22. It is not men's anxious labour and care that make them rich, either in temporal or spiritual things; but the blessing of God upon their lawful endeavours confers riches, and enables to enjoy them comfortably, without pressure of guilt, tormenting fear, or perplexing care. 23. Senseless sinners take pleasure in, and make a jest of, the most horrid impieties they can commit: but they that are wise carefully avoid mischief, and all sporting with it or delighting in it. 24. The miseries which wicked men fear under the awakenings of conscience shall come upon them; and whatever blessings the righteous desire and pray for shall be granted them in due season. 25. However the wicked may bluster for a while, and threaten to overthrow everything that stands in their way, they quickly and terribly ruin themselves and rush into misery: but the righteous, being built on Christ the Rock of Ages, and fixed in piety and virtue, stand fast for ever. No storm can shake their confidence, or deprive them of their durable and immovable felicity. 26. As vinegar sets the teeth on edge, and smoke is vexatious to the eyes, so sluggish, negligent, and dilatory persons vex and provoke them who send or employ them in any important business. 27. A religious observance of God's laws, and preserving of our body in temperance, soberness, and chastity, tends to prolong our life: but wickedness of itself, and by God's righteous judgments on account of it, brings on diseases, and hastens the sinner to his grave and to hell. 28. The hope of the godly, founded on Jesus' promise and blood, brings delight and satisfaction to the soul, and issues in everlasting felicity; but the hope of the wicked shall issue in disappointment and eternal misery. 29. Upright walking in Christ, and the exercising of piety and virtue, increase a person's strength for duty and courage in it: but the workers of iniquity shall be plagued with terrors and overwhelmed in misery. 30. Nothing so establishes persons or families in a relation to Christ as their righteousness, and a course of piety, justice, and mercy: but the wicked, however successful they may be for a time, shall never be able to fix themselves in their prosperity, but be rooted out from the enjoyment of it. 31. The godly, out of the good treasure of their heart, bring forth good discourse, which tends to make the hearers wise unto salvation: but he that uses his tongue to abuse, cozen, or raise dissension, or to blaspheme God and spread error, shall, in the end, have it silenced in hell. 32. The righteous know, and accustom themselves to speak things truly useful and edifying; but the wicked abandon their lips to falsehood, flattery, fraud, and calumny, or such like subtle but detestable arts of doing mischief.

Ver. 1. This is the commencement of the second great division of the book. It is different in structure from the first division. The latter is made up of parables and proverbs of considerable length; while the former consists wholly of brief, pointed sentences, each of which consists generally of two antithetical members, embodying one idea. Most of them are figurative, being based on some comparison, both in language and in idea. It is probable that, though all these proverbial sayings were at one time or another uttered by Solomon, yet most of them were of much older date. His diligent study had made him familiar with the wisdom of the ancients, and his powerful memory retained it. In the end he either wrote the proverbs out himself under divine guidance, or he employed others to do so. Most of these proverbs are examples of antithetical parallelism, the second clause containing the contrast to the first. Each verse is, as a rule, complete in itself, and embodies a perfectly intelligible sentiment. There is in each a truth clearly and sharply enunciated, and a lesson which is almost forced upon the heart. P.

Ver. 6. For the original meaning of blessing, see note on Ge. 1. 22, 28. And such blessings, spiritual, 'the just,' the justified by faith, enjoy in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Ep. 1. 3—even the blessings of the election of grace, the adoption of children, the pardon of sin, acceptance in the Beloved, inseparable union with their exalted Head, the revelation of grace, and the eternal inheritance of unfading glory. C.

Ver. 12. Hatred stirs up strifes that are at rest; but love covers them over, so that they sleep and are not remembered. And it is not to small or few offences that this gentle office is extended: love covereth all, even the 'multitude of sins,' 1 Co. 13. 7. C.

Ver. 15. Wealth. Not the wealth of money, for that, by tempting cupidity, is often the cause of ruin; but the wealth of faith, of good works, 1 Ti. 6. 18; Ja. 2. 5, and spiritual wisdom, in which the poverty here described has neither lot, inheritance, nor defence. C.

Ver. 21. This is true, naturally and spiritually. A little instruction in mechanics and agriculture may almost miraculously multiply the food of a country; while the words of truth and com-

CHAPTER XI.

A FALSE^a balance¹ is abomination to the LORD: but a just weight² is his delight.

2 When^b pride cometh, then cometh shame: but with the lowly is wisdom.

3 The^c integrity of the upright shall guide them: but the perverseness of transgressors shall destroy them.

4 Riches^d profit not in the day of wrath: but righteousness delivereth from death.

5 The^e righteousness of the perfect shall direct³ his way:⁴ but the wicked shall fall by his own wickedness.

6 The^f righteousness of the upright⁵ shall deliver them: but transgressors shall be taken in their own naughtiness.

7 When⁴ a wicked man dieth, his expectation shall perish; and the hope of unjust men perisheth.

8 The⁷ righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead.

Ver. 22. No sorrow in remembering how it was got, no sorrow in estimating how much has been lost, no sorrow in contemplating how much is endangered, no sorrow in anticipating how lavishly it may be spent, and no sorrow in watching and protecting it from the covetous, the deceitful, or the violent. C.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. All manner of injustice and fraud is extremely hateful and detestable to God, the governor of the world: but strict equity in the whole of our commerce one with another is highly pleasing to him. 2. Haughty conceit of ourselves, and insulting of others, draws along with it the utmost contempt and disgrace; both God and men take pleasure to mortify and expose the proud; but such as, having learned of Christ, live under a deep sense of their own weakness and unworthiness, find favour with men and acceptance with God. 3. When men sincerely practise what God has revealed to them, they may expect his Spirit to direct them in their duty and to their eternal felicity: but the obstinate adherence of sinners to their own lusts and imaginations, and their opposition to Christ and his laws, shall hurry them into certain and everlasting destruction. 4. Riches, heaped up by extortion or covetousness, are of no avail to deliver us from the wrath of God, or even the rage of men, when the time of punishment is come: but righteousness hath a promise of life annexed to it; it prevents those sins which would expose us to God's judgments or man's punishments; it secures against the sting of temporal, and prevents eternal death. 5, 6. Being made righteous in Christ, and sanctified by his grace, and studying a sincere and impartial observance of God's laws, are effectual means to secure direction in duty and deliverance from evil; but the wicked shall perish by those very impious and evil courses by which they hoped to secure or exalt themselves. 7. In death wicked men find all their projects and hopes utterly destroyed. Whatever they thought to accomplish by their riches, their power, or their friends, perishes together with them, while they themselves launch forth into eternal misery. 8. The righteous are frequently in an unexpected manner delivered from their perplexing troubles; and the wicked, who perhaps brought them into them, are plunged into those very miseries themselves. 9. By flatteries, false doctrines, and artful seductions, hypocrites draw their neighbours into sin, and thereby into ruin. But through knowledge of Christ and his Word shall the righteous be guarded against their wiles, and preserved from the destruction which they intended. 10. It is matter of general gladness when wise and godly men prosper and are advanced, because they use their power and wealth for the benefit of all around them; and great is the joy when wicked men, who, as plagues and curses where they dwell, corrupt their manners, and draw down the wrath of God upon them, are cut off. 11. By God's blessing upon the upright, and by their prayers, advices, and kindness, all around them are profited: but the wicked, by their blasphemies, errors, evil counsels, and maxims, corrupt men's manners, and ruin their welfare. 12. It is common for self-conceited fools to despise their neighbours, to reproach them as weak, or to render them ridiculous; but a prudent man, whatever he thinks, avoids speaking to the reproach of others; as, beside the wickedness of contemning others, none is so mean as to be insensible of it, or incapable of finding means of resentment. 13. They who make a trade of carrying tales from one to another, never stick at treacherously discovering the secrets which have been intrusted to them; but a faithful friend conceals, not only what has been intrusted to him, but everything else that could tend to his neighbour's prejudice. 14. Where prudent counsel is wanting, nations and private affairs go to wreck: but where many wise counsellors unite in their deliberations, every precaution will be taken, every danger prevented, and the most proper methods used to insure success. 15. He who stands bound for the debts of another man, especially one whose ability and honesty are unknown to him, is in great danger to be ruined in his estate: and the way to be secure in that point is to avoid and hate all such engagements. 16. Remarkable and increasing grace and virtue in a woman will engage affection and respect when all other accomplishments fade and decline; and strong men hold fast the wealth which they have acquired. 17. He who is kind and bountiful to others, secures to himself a gracious reward from God: but he who is covetous, hard-hearted, and cruel, brings trouble on himself and his relations. 18. Whatever wicked men do to render themselves rich, easy, or honoured, will disappoint their expectation; but they who exercise themselves in true piety and virtue, shall infallibly obtain the blessed reward of their works in time and eternity. 19. As holiness and virtue promote true happiness here and hereafter, so the more eagerly a man pursues an evil course, the more is he bent upon his own destruction. 20. Hypocrites, who live in enmity and opposition to God and his law, while they pretend much piety, kindness, equity, and candour, are of all men the most odious to him: but they who, being renewed by his grace, walk before him in truth, equity, simplicity, and godly sincerity, are, and shall for ever be, the objects of his special favour and delight. 21. Though wicked men should do their utmost attempt to strengthen themselves by leagues and associates, they shall never be capable of protecting themselves from the just punishment of their sin: but the righteous, and often their children for their sakes, though deserted of all men, shall be delivered by God himself from everything ruinous. 22. As a golden jewel is very ill placed in the snout of a swine, which is still routing in mires and dunghills; so beauty is ill bestowed upon a woman who, void of good sense, modesty, and virtue, loves to employ herself in perpetual talkativeness, and wallow in filthy lusts and whorish pleasures. 23. The righteous habitually desire, and shall obtain, solid and substantial blessings to themselves and others; but wicked men wish for mischief on others, and hope to execute their wrath and malice upon them; which in the end will only bring more fearful and lasting ruin upon themselves. 24, 25. They who, from a right principle, are remarkably liberal to the poor and to pious institutions, shall find their stock proportionably increased for their real advantage; and while they refresh and support others with their bounty, God shall reward them with prosperity of soul, in grace or comfort, or even with the enjoyments of this present world: but the pinching hand of avarice prevents enjoyment, or brings down the curse of God upon our substance. 26. He who, in a time of scarcity, hoards up corn to raise the price, shall be hated and cursed by mankind: but good wishes and commendations from men, and blessings from God, shall attend him who then opens his granaries and sells it at a moderate price. 27. He who earnestly sets himself to contrive and do good to others, shall obtain favour with God and men: but he who makes mischief his business shall draw upon himself the evil which he designs against his neighbour. 28. He that anxiously grasps for, and trusts in, riches as his surest support and defence, shall find them a broken reed to pierce him through with many sorrows, and shall fall to decay as a withered leaf: but the righteous, who are united to Christ by faith, and walk in all holy and just conversation, shall receive, out of his fulness, abundant supplies of quickening and fruitifying grace, and shall thrive and prosper in their concerns. 29. He who by his passion, prodigality, covetousness, and ambition troubles his family, may for a time make a great bustle and stir, but it will issue in disappointment, disgrace, and poverty; and the fool, who knows not how to manage, and who lives without thought, shall be reduced to want, and forced to serve, if not sell himself to, a wiser neighbour. 30. A good man's graces, prayers, instructions, and examples are a mean of quickening, comfort, and prosperity to others around: and he that by instruction, prayer, or the like, draws men from Satan to the knowledge, faith, and obedience of Christ, shows forth true and heavenly wisdom. 31. If God will not pass his own favourites without proper correction for their sins in this world, who can justly expect that the obstinate and contemptuous breakers of his law shall escape the just punishment of their many crimes?

Ver. 3. Integrity literally signifies entireness. The love of God, united with the love of our neighbour—and that measured by the love of self—constitutes this entireness, this completeness of principle, which guides the believer in every way, however dark, intricate, or dangerous; and never is acquired by man as a sinner, but by the revelation of the love of God in Christ, which constrains him first to love God, and then his neighbour as himself. C.

Ver. 9. This fact was awfully exemplified by the scribes and Pharisees, that generation of vipers, hypocrites, by whom speedy and terrible vengeance was brought down upon the nation whom they deceived. C.

Ver. 10. In the multitude, &c. This is a proverb frequently perverted, as if it meant, that in the multitude of talkers and

We often hear of Christian charity, and Christian benevolence, and Christian love, as if these had never been known previous to the advent of our Lord. They are as old as creation. They lie at the foundation of the truth. There is no difference between the moral code

CHAPTER XII.

WHOSO loveth^a instruction loveth knowledge: but he that hateth reproof is brutish.¹

2 A^b good man obtaineth favour of the LORD: but a man of wicked devices will he condemn.

3 A^c man shall not be established by wicked-opinions there was safety—whereas counsellors, in the scriptural sense, are those who, being filled with the Spirit of God, which is a Spirit of counsel, Is. 11, 2, are 'wise to win souls,' and to lead men to Christ, the only refuge of sinners. C.

Ver. 21. This verse is generally interpreted of the confederacies of wicked men, ratified by hand joining in hand, as a manner of swearing. The interpretation of the judicious Brown Paterson, 'from hand to hand,' from one generation to another, seems greatly preferable, as in strict conformity with the following clause. C.

Ver. 22. Personal beauty is one of the gifts of God, and, like all his other gifts, may be employed for his glory and the good of the creature upon whom it is bestowed. But to this end it must be guided by discretion—a judgment formed in the light of divine truth on the origin and fading nature of the gift, and the accountability of the possessor for its use or abuse. Without this discretion, it is but like a costly ornament bestowed upon the swine, which degrades it by its unclean propensities—and 'returns, even from being washed, to its wallowing in the mire.' C.

Ver. 29. He that troubleth his own house, &c. This proverb is mainly directed to those who can govern their tongue and temper in public, but who lay aside this restraint, and forget 'the law of kindness' in their own houses. They shall inherit the wind—calms uncertain, and the storms destructive. C.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. He who loves reproofs, advice, and instructions, will become wise and intelligent; but he who declines, hates, and is enraged at rebukes for his faults, is under the power of his brutish passions; and there is little hope that he will ever know or act like a man. 2. The man who, being united to Christ, is clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his grace, and deals kindly and bountifully with others, shall be more and more favoured and blessed of God; but he whose thoughts are bent on wickedness shall be condemned to suffer the just punishment of his iniquity. 3. No man, however subtle or powerful, shall be able to establish his own or his family's greatness by wicked methods: but the righteous, being rooted and grounded in the rock Christ, though shaken by manifold storms of trouble, shall remain unmovable in a flourishing state. 4. A pious, prudent, active, chaste, and affectionate wife is a singular ornament and honour to her husband: but one that is graceless, lazy, foolish, prodigal, peevish, boisterous, and wanton, shames him when abroad, and torments him at home; and, like an incurable disease, vexes his heart, hastens him to his grave, wastes his substance, and ruins his family. 5. The thoughts and designs of good men are managed with piety, equity, candour, and truth; but the contrivances of the wicked are carried on with fraud, dissimulation, and falsehood. 6. Wicked men, by their consultations with one another, and by their reproach and perjury, study to undo their opposers; but they who are sincerely good will labour, by their advice, testimony, commendation, or request, to deliver such innocent persons from their snares. 7. God himself not only defeats the ruinous projects of the wicked, but totally destroys and extirpates them and their families: whereas he continues and establishes the persons, properties, and families of the just. 8. Not earthly science, honour, or riches, but spiritual wisdom, and a prudent management of his affairs, by far and honest means, will render a man highly and lastingly honoured, and commended of God and of all good men. but he who indulges his obstinate corruptions, hates and opposes his duty, and labours by wicked means to accomplish his ends, shall bring himself into present and everlasting contempt. 9. Far happier is he who, making no pompous show in the world, lives within the bounds of his income, though it should hardly afford him a single servant, than he who shows away with a great deal of elegance, equipage, and attendants, when he can hardly get necessary subsistence, without running into debt, or some other shameful and miserable shift. 10. Good men have implanted in their hearts a tender concern for the welfare and life of the brute animals, much more for that of their servants and neighbours: but the nature of the wicked is so cruel, that the very kindnesses which they affect to show are maliciously designed and ruinous. 11. Diligent industry in lawful callings shall, through the blessing of God, afford men a competent portion of temporal things; but idleness and bad company mark a man foolish, and lead him into desperate, impoverishing, and ruinous courses. 12. Wicked men desire, approve, and practise deceitful arts for ruining others, and wish to be secure in so doing; but the piety and justice from which righteous men's actions proceed, bring forth glory to God, maintenance and blessings to themselves, and much benefit and advantage to others around. 13. Wicked men are often brought into trouble by their own rash speeches, treasons, perjuries, lies, and calumnies: but the righteous, by the providence of God, and even by their prudent discourse, avoid and escape from many difficulties, in which otherwise they had been entangled. 14. A man shall receive abundant blessings from God, as the reward of that good which he has done by his pious and profitable discourses or works. 15. Fools are so self-conceited, that they consult nobody, but hold right whatever they think or do themselves: but wise men, distrusting their own judgment and abilities, wisely ask and take advice or instruction of others. 16. Fools, having no command of their passions, are no sooner provoked, than rage and fury appear in their countenance, words, and actions; but prudent persons conceal that displeasure which would tend to their disgrace, and overlook the shameful provocation given them, rather than dishonour themselves by resenting it. 17. He who, especially the truth, and nothing else, shows himself an honest man, and does justice to his neighbours: but he who conceals truth, forges lies, or attests falsehoods, shows himself a deceitful and mischievous villain. 18. Some, by false accusations, calumnies, and bitter reproaches, wound the reputations, spirits, or estates of their neighbours, and make discords and divisions among them: but good men, by their prudent speeches, will labour to heal men's reputations, compose their disputes, and comfort and edify their souls. 19. Constant adherence to strict truth in his speeches establishes a man's credit, and what he says can never be disproved; but a liar, though he may be at first believed, is soon after found out and confuted; and he is moreover apt to contradict himself, and blast his reputation for ever. 20. They who plot mischief shall, to their great vexation, be disappointed in their expectations, and even fall into that evil which they intended for others; but they who by their counsels labour to promote the piety, peace, and happiness of others, shall have lasting joy and comfort for their reward. 21. Let the wicked plot as they will, nothing shall befall the righteous, but what tends to their spiritual and eternal advantage; but the wicked shall be quite overwhelmed with inward plagues and outward calamities. 22. Lies and liars are remarkably hated and abhorred of God; but they who, in their speeches and whole conduct, act in truth, fidelity, and candour, are beloved, and shall be blessed by him. 23. A prudent man conceals the knowledge he has, except when called by Providence to use it for the benefit of others, and even then makes no boasting ostentation of it; but a fool, through thoughtlessness, rashness, or ambition to be esteemed wise, proclaims his own weakness and ignorance. 24. Diligent and prudent activity in honest callings is the way to obtain riches, honour, and authority; but laziness and villany render men poor and enslaved. 25. Anxious cares about the things of this world, griefs for disappointments and troubles, convictions of sin, and fears of hell, depress the most magnanimous spirit, and make it to pore disconsolate over its wretchedness: but good instruction and advice from friends, and especially the promises of God powerfully applied, revive and make it glad. 26. In his state of union with Christ, justification and adoption, in his inward graces, and his exercises of holiness, and in his abundant happiness, a righteous man is more excellent than his neighbour; but the way that the wicked takes to render himself great or happy only deceives and disappoints him, and issues in misery. 27. Lazy wretches cannot endure to prosecute their own schemes for obtaining earthly enjoyments; or what they have deceitfully obtained never affords them any real comforts, but, as it were, slips through their fingers, or rots at their side, or is taken from them: but the wealth and honour, which is obtained by an honest diligence, is extremely valuable and lasting, being blessed of God. 28. In receiving Christ as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, and walking in him, there is a real possession of life spiritual, and a certain ness: but the root of the righteous shall not be moved.²

4 A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband: but she that maketh ashamed is as rottenness in his bones.

5 The thoughts of the righteous are right: but the counsels of the wicked are deceit.

6 The words of the wicked are to lie in wait for blood: but the mouth of the upright shall deliver them.

7 The wicked are overthrown, and are not: but the house of the righteous shall stand.

8 A man shall be commended according to his wisdom: but he that is of a perverse heart shall be despised.

9 He that is despised, and hath a servant, is better than he that honoureth himself, and lacketh bread.⁴

10 A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast: but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.

11 He that tilleth his land shall be satisfied with bread: but he that followeth vain persons is void of understanding.

12 The wicked desireth the net of evil men: but the root of the righteous yieldeth fruit.

13 The wicked is snared by the transgression of his lips: but the just shall come out of trouble.

14 A man shall be satisfied with good by the fruit of his mouth; and the recompense of a man's hands shall be rendered unto him.

15 The way of a fool is right in his own eyes: but he that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise.

16 A fool's wrath is presently known: but a prudent man covereth shame.

17 He that speaketh truth sheweth forth righteousness: but a false witness deceit.

18 There is that speaketh like the piercings of a sword: but the tongue of the wise is health.

19 The lip of truth shall be established for ever: but a lying tongue is but for a moment.

20 Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil: but to the counsellors of peace is joy.

21 There shall no evil happen to the just: but the wicked shall be filled with mischief.

22 Lying lips are abomination to the Lord: but they that deal truly are his delight.

23 A prudent man concealeth knowledge: but the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness.

24 The hand of the diligent shall bear rule: but the slothful shall be under tribute.

25 Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop: but a good word maketh it glad.

26 The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour: but the way of the wicked seduceth them.

27 The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting: but the substance of a diligent man is precious.

28 In the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death.

CHAPTER XIII.

A WISE son heareth his father's instruction: but a scorner heareth not rebuke.

2 A man shall eat good by the fruit of his mouth: but the soul of the transgressors shall eat violence.¹

3 He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction.

4 The soul of the sluggard desireth, and prospect of life eternal; nor is there a single act of piety or virtue that tends to make a man miserable.

Ver. 14. The fruit of his mouth. A word of instruction, reproof, comfort, or kindness is sure to be, sooner or later, in some form repaid—and though never acknowledged by the world, will not be forgotten of God. In another sense also the proverb is fulfilled: the man who establishes a character for truth and intelligence, is sure to find his remuneration in character and employment, ver. 17. 19. C.

Ver. 21. No evil. No real, permanent evil. Troubles, pains, and even distresses, he may feel, but there is nothing really evil that is not superseded by the enjoyment of eternal blessedness. C.

Ver. 26. More excellent. 'More successful' (A. Williams). But as there is none righteous but Jesus, Ro. 3. 10, 22, the words either describe him who is 'fairer than the sons of men,' or the man who is made righteous by faith in Jesus, and whose excellency lies in the imputation of righteousness, and the renewal of his nature by the power of his Spirit. C.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. Wise children will reverently receive, obey, and submit to their parents' instructions, advices, and corrections; but there is no hope of him who laughs and scoffs when he is admonished or chidden for his faults. 2. He who lays himself out in instructing, advising, and comforting others, or in other edifying discourse, shall be regarded by men and rewarded by God: but evil speakers shall be forced to endure those miseries which they brought upon others. 3. He that carefully bridle his tongue, thinks well before he speaks, and takes heed to utter nothing improper or unseasonable, preserves himself from much trouble and danger: but he who is extremely talkative, throwing out everything that comes into his head, is in the ready way to be ruined, both by God and by man. 4. Nothing, neither riches, nor learning, nor honour, nor happiness, is to be gotten by mere sluggish desires, without diligent endeavours; but they who, in a dependence upon God, industriously use proper means, shall have sufficiency of outward things, and abundant comforts in Christ, both here and hereafter. 5. A righteous man not only carefully avoids, but hates, all manner of falsehood in heart, word, and deed; but a wicked man continues to impose upon others, till his detected falsehoods and villanies render him evidently odious to God and detested by men, as a stinking carcass; and so contemptible that he dare not show his face for shame. 6. They who have Jesus' sacrificial life in them, and his grace accepted by them, and who study uprightness and equity in their whole conduct, shall be preserved sound in the faith, steadfast in the obedience of the gospel, unmoved by Satan's temptations or the world's frowns or smiles; but the wicked man, and all his wicked contrivances, shall be overthrown by their own iniquity. 7. Some, in their pride and vanity, make a great show of wealth, wisdom, or grace, when they are worth nothing: while others, by their garb or their speeches, conceal their abundant riches, knowledge, or grace. 8. Riches are so far from rendering men truly happy, that they tempt others to rob or accuse them, that their lives may be saved by huge sums of money; whereas the poor is reckoned so inconsiderable, that nobody thinks it worth while to rob, accuse, or even rebuke him. 9. The holiness, comfort, and prosperity of the righteous continues in its brightness and glory: but the small appearance of comfort and happiness which the wicked enjoy in this world will quickly be extinguished in endless misery. 10. Pride is the principal, and often the sole, cause of quarrels and contentions, and of the continuance of them: the opinionated cannot bear contradiction; the aspiring, a rival; the selfwilled, opposition: but they who piously consult their God and their Bible, and prudently advise with their discreet neighbours, transact things in quietness and peace. 11. Wealth gotten by fraud, gaming, theft, oppression, or the like, having the curse of God upon it, shall quickly be wasted: but that which is gotten by honest industry and diligence shall continue and increase. 12. The delay of that which a man eagerly expects renders his mind very uneasy; but when he enjoys what he long desired and looked for, it is sweet, satisfactory, and reviving. 13. He who despises God's word, or the advices of his faithful friends, shall quickly be ruined: but he who reverently submits himself to and obeys God's commandments shall be rewarded. 14. The instructions of a good man, and much more the doctrines of God's Word, refresh, comfort, and enliven the soul, and preserve from those pernicious principles and destructive practices by which many are insnared. 15. A prudent, pious, and regular behaviour is most amiable and acceptable to all men: but the behaviour of lawless and wicked persons, like a rough way, is very ruinous to themselves, and offensive to God and good men. 16. Prudent persons undertake nothing but with due deliberation, and what they understand: and manage their affairs with knowledge and discretion: but fools discover their weakness, by rashly meddling with matters out of their reach. 17. Unfaithfulness in discharging his trust, or delivering his message, will bring a wicked servant, ambassador, or minister into shame, condemnation, and misery: but he who acts faithfully procures safety and advantage both to his master and himself. 18. It is a high satisfaction to enjoy what we desire, especially spiritual blessings and comforts: but foolish sinners hath nothing: but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat.

5 A^h righteous man hateth lying: but a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame.

6 Righteousness^h keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth the sinner.²

7 There^h is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing: ³ there^h is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.

8 The^h ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the poor heareth not rebuke.

9 The^h light of the righteous rejoiceth: but the lamp^h of the wicked shall be put out.

10 Only^h by pride cometh contention: but with the well-advised is wisdom.

11 Wealth^h gotten by vanity shall be diminished: but he that gathereth by labour^h shall increase.

12 Hope^h deferred maketh the heart sick: but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.⁷

13 Whoso^h despiseth the word shall be destroyed: but he that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded.⁸

14 The^h law of the wise is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

15 Good^h understanding giveth favour: but the way of transgressors is hard.

16 Every^h prudent man dealeth with knowledge: but a fool^h layeth open his folly.

CHAPTER XIV.

EVERY wise^h woman buildeth her house: but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands.

2 He^h that walketh in his uprightness feareth the LORD: but he that is perverse in his ways despiseth him.

hate to forsake their lusts and sinful practices, even as means of receiving the choicest benefits. 22. By gaining his estate in a just and upright manner, and by doing good with it while he lives, and by earnest instruction of and fervent prayers for his family, a good man takes the surest course to fix his estate upon them for many generations: but the sinner leaves a curse entailed upon his wealth: and, by the righteous providence of God, it is quickly transferred from his family to one that is truly pious and virtuous. 23. Poor men, by their diligent labour and industry, many times abundantly provide for themselves and family, and even grow rich; while others, who are rich, are reduced to poverty, through their ignorance, rashness, injustice, oppression, deceit, &c. 24. That fond affection which restrains parents from duly correcting their children when they do amiss, is a real and ruinous hatred, a sinful withholding from them a mean, appointed by God, for their amendment and happiness: but parents who truly love their children will study, by early and Christian corrections, to prevent their fixing in evil habits or customs. 25. A righteous man never wants satisfaction, because his desires are moderate, and he lives in a temperate use of God's blessings; God gives him a competency, a heart to use it, and contentment in it: but wicked men, insatiable in their desires, and extravagant in the abuse of their plenty, shall be indigent in the midst of abundance, or reduced to the distresses of poverty.

Ver. 3. As a little helm governs the largest ship, so does the tongue govern the man; and as he that governs the helm guides the ship, he that can govern the tongue can command the man—and in doing so, he 'keepeth his life'—his life of faith in Jesus, of peace with God, and of joy in the Holy Ghost, and hope of glory. C.
Ver. 6. Righteousness. Not his own righteousness, for that has no existence beyond the name, Ro. 3. 10: but the 'righteousness of God which is, by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Ro. 3. 22. C.
Ver. 7. Maketh himself poor. A man may, in the natural sense, 'make himself poor,' as in educating and providing for his family, and thereby he is made truly rich. He may also make himself comparatively poor by deeds of beneficence, and be in the sight of God 'rich in good works,' 1 Ti. 6. 18. But, in the spiritual sense, the passage is most completely verified: for the man that, by grace, 'maketh himself poor in spirit,' is, in return, enriched with possession of the kingdom of heaven, Mat. 5. 2. C.
Ver. 8. The poor heareth not rebuke. The poor in the world, and the poor in spirit, are like some humble plant, in a valley far below the storms of the higher regions: they hear them not. The one might be happy, if he valued the peace of his station: the other is really so, for he enjoys the peace of God. C.

Ver. 14. The law—the word and doctrine of the wise—which teaches to depart from the ways of sin and death, is a fountain of spiritual comfort and peace, springing up to life eternal, Jn. 4. 14. C.

Ver. 15. A man of 'good understanding' will do a favour when in his power; but the way of transgressors is hard; that is, unkind, offensive, violent. C.

Ver. 19. He that would accomplish good, must often pass 'through bad report,' and labour after his object with much self-denial—but Providence will repay him in the end with the sweet satisfaction of good attained, as well as intended. But fools will never sacrifice present indulgence for future hopes; self-denial, repentance, and godliness are their 'abomination'—their god is their belly—their end is destruction, Phil. 3. 19. C.

Ver. 24. Let parents beware of misunderstanding this precept. 'The rod' does not signify merely the 'rod' of punishment, but also the 'rod' of a dignified authority; of a habitual, temperate, and chastened restraint. C.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1. A virtuous wife, by her piety, prudence, good economy, and the like, supports and advances her family in honour, happiness, and wealth: but a wicked imprudent wife, by her pride, prodigality, idleness, carelessness, or otherwise, will quickly reduce a happy family to poverty, disgrace, and ruin. 2. By a universal regard to piety and virtue, men manifest the fear and holy reverence of God implanted in their heart: but by an obstinate rebellion against his laws, and eager study to gratify their sinful lusts and passions, they discover their profane contempt of his Majesty. 3. The insolent, calumniating, and contemptuous speeches of proud men are very injurious and wounding to others, and often at last prove a scourge to themselves: but the prudent, peaceable, and pleasing words of wise men, neither offending God nor men, secure them in safety. 4. They who would have plenty must be content with the dirt that labour makes; or if the tillage of the fields be neglected, famine must follow; but laborious tillage will issue in great plenty. 5. Proud self-conceited scoffers at what is holy and serious are never like to profit by their studies, or to come to the knowledge of divine truth; whereas they who humbly, and dependently on God, apply themselves to search out truth, quickly attain to the knowledge of whatever is necessary and useful. 6. It is proper to flee from the company of such persons as discover the corruption of their heart in the vanity or wickedness of their words.

8. Prudent men chiefly study to know how to act in their own calling and religious course; but wicked men employ their knowledge and wit to deceive others. 9. Insensible of the evil, malignity, and danger of sin, wicked men harden themselves in it, please themselves with their own and other men's sins, sport themselves in the commission or recollection thereof, and so provoke God to wrath against them; but they who are afraid of, hate, and avoid sin, truly love and regard their neighbours, and obtain favour with God and man. 10. No one can know what another inwardly suffers in worldly griefs and vexations, or in troubles of conscience; neither can they share with him in his inward joys, particularly those of a spiritual nature. 11. The stately houses, wealthy and honoured families of the wicked, shall in wrath be reduced to ruin and misery, and their hopes of eternal happiness issue in everlasting despair; whereas the poor and unsettled family of the truly pious shall flourish and become illustrious. 12. There is need strictly and impartially to try courses and customs: for prejudice, self-flattery, affected ignorance, and the like, make many things seem lawful and good which are really sinful and ruinous. 13. Immoderate joys and pleasures are ordinarily mingled with and issue in inward vexation and anguish: and the diverting of inward convictions and important duties by carnal mirth will quickly issue in the weepings and wailings of eternal despair. 14. He who even in heart revolts from God and his ways, shall be fearfully overwhelmed with the punishment of his sin; but a good man, who steadfastly cleaves to the Lord, shall enjoy great comfort in the testimony of a good conscience, and in keeping God's commands. 15. Weak half-witted persons believe every idle story and plausible pretence, and thereby are drawn into evil: but prudent men examine things before they trust to them or practise them. 16. A wise man, when warned of his error or danger, fears to displease God or to provoke his wrath, and immediately starts back from the sin to which he was tempted, or in which he had involved himself: but a fool rages against those that reprove, warn, or threaten him, and goes on resolutely in sin, fearless of any danger. 17. He who is soon angry involves himself in rash and imprudent words and actions, for which he is to be pitied: but a man who conceals

4 Where no oxen are, the crib is clean: 'but much increase is by the strength of the ox.

5 A^a faithful witness will not lie: but a false witness will utter lies.

6 A^a scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not: 'but knowledge is easy unto him that understandeth.

7 Go^a from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.

8 The^a wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way: 'but the folly of fools is deceit.

9 Fools^a make a mock¹ at ²sin: 'but among the righteous there is favour.

10 The^a heart knoweth his own bitterness;³ and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.

11 The^a house of the wicked shall be overthrown: but the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.

12 There^a is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.

13 Even^a in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness.

14 The^a backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways; 'and a good man shall be satisfied from himself.

15 The^a simple believeth every word: but the prudent man looketh well to his going.

16 A^a wise man feareth, and departeth from evil: but the fool 'rageth, and is confident.

17 He^a that is soon angry dealeth foolishly; and^a a man of wicked devices is hated.

² This is very common in the world. Open sins—chamfered sins are often made topics of merriment and joking. Nothing could be more unseemly, and nothing could be more injurious in its influence. Sin as a violation of God's law, as an offence against the majesty of Heaven, as a blot upon the immortal soul of man, which was made in the divine image, is never to be regarded with feelings of holy horror and profound regret. Besides, joking and merriment make us familiar with that which forms their subject; the moral sense is thus dulled and deadened, and the way opened up to personal indulgence.—P.

20 The^a poor is hated even of his own neighbour: but the rich hath many friends.⁴

22 Do^a they not err that devise evil? 'but mercy and truth shall be to them that devise good.

24 The^a crown of the wise is their riches: 'but the foolishness of fools is folly.⁶

25 A^a true witness delivereth souls: but a deceitful witness speaketh lies.

27 The^a fear of the LORD is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

28 In^a the multitude of people is the king's honour: but in the want of people is the destruction of the prince.

33 Wisdom^a resteth in the heart of him that knowledge of Christ, without making unseasonable or ostentatious demonstrations of it: but foolish men expose themselves by their eager desire to vent their minds in every company. 34. Religion and virtue, equity and kindness, through the blessing of God, increase the glory, power, and wealth of a nation: but rebellion against God, or injuring of mankind, disgraces and ruins societies. 35. A prudent, active, and faithful minister of state cannot but be dear to a wise king: and one who by his ill management disgraces his government, and brings all things into confusion, cannot but be the object of his wrath.

Ver. 1. The wise woman, by her prudence and management, godly example, and instruction, raises her family either in riches or character, or both; while the foolish, by her vanity, extravagance, and neglect, brings ruin upon herself, her husband, and her children. This truth applies to churches as well as to families. C.

Ver. 6. Those that would not strive, Lu. 13.24, 25, and the 'foolish virgins' who neglected, Mat. 25.8-11, all sought to enter and were refused. The first, because they did not strive; and when forced to come near, they still stood without, and would not enter by Christ the door, Jn. 10.9; and the 'foolish virgins' came without light, without Christ 'the true light', Jn. 1.4, 9, and were therefore justly rejected and condemned, Jn. 3.19. C.

Ver. 12. If a man judge by temporal advantages, and not by eternal interests—if he follow human authority in preference to divine truth—if he obey the impulse of passion instead of reason and conscience, all his ways will seem right when seen by these false lights, but their seeming will not change their nature—they all terminate in spiritual and eternal death. C.

Ver. 14. A good man shall be satisfied from himself. How can a man be satisfied from himself? Not from himself, as a branch bearing fruit by its own power; but from himself as a branch in Christ the living vine, and bearing all his fruit because of this union, Jn. 15.5; not from himself as a mine, naively producing silver, gold, or gems; but from himself as an earthen vessel which God has enriched with his heavenly treasures, a Co. 4.7. C.

Ver. 19. The evil bow before the good. Sooner or later this event is always realized; and the temporary exceptions never his wrath, and deliberately contrives how to take a cruel revenge, deserves to be hated and abhorred. 18. Inconsiderate sinners hold fast their wickedness, and delight in it, as their portion and inheritance, till they feel the woful effects of it: but the prudent, to their remarkable honour and influence, increase in spiritual understanding. 19. Even in this world the wicked are often obliged to stoop and submit to the righteous, and implore their favour and relief: and at the last day, the debasement of the wicked, and exaltation of the righteous, shall be complete. 20. If a man fall into poverty, his neighbours, who once professed great friendship, will forsake and disregard him: but if a man grow rich, many, who before took no notice of him, will pretend great affection to him, and even the greatest will offer him their favour. 21. He who overlooks and contemns his poor neighbour provokes God to punish and render him miserable: but he who compassionately relieves the poor shall be blessed by God on that account. 22. They who contrive mischief against their innocent neighbours miss their end and ruin themselves: but they who study to do men real good shall be graciously and faithfully rewarded by God. 23. Industrious labour in any lawful calling will bring in some gain: but talkativeness and proud boasting tend only to make men beggars. 24. Riches are a singular ornament and advantage to wise men who know how to use them, because thereby they have the greater opportunities of doing good: but riches only render foolish men's folly the more notorious, because they have thereby the greater opportunities of doing mischief and wickedness. 25. An upright witness will, at all hazards, avow the truth, to save the lives or characters of such as are falsely accused: but deceitful men will boldly pour forth lies and calumnies to destroy the innocent. 26. They that fear God may be confident of his protection to themselves and their posterity in times of danger. 27. A holy regard to God, and obedience to his law, will issue in men's solid and eternal comfort, and preserve them from those sinful courses in which many are ensnared to their own destruction. 28. Kings ought to cherish their subjects; for on their number, wealth, and power, their own honour depends; and if they be wasted by unnecessary wars, or forced by oppression into other countries, it will prove the ruin of the kingdom. 29. He who under great provocations can maintain a calmness of temper, discovers much wisdom and grace: but he who is hastily inflamed by reproaches and ill-usage, exposes his corruption and folly, and makes it apparent to every one. 30. Nothing more conduces to health and happiness than a mind renewed by God's Spirit, freed from the dominion of sinful lusts, quiet, gentle, and contented: but envy, and such like fretful passions, torment men's spirits, waste their bodies, and hasten them towards hell and the grave. 31. He that defrauds or oppresses the poor, or withholds the relief which their circumstances require, forgets and even practically blasphemes God who makes them poor, and engages himself to defend and relieve them: but he who hath any due respect to God will show pity to the poor, and labour to supply them. 32. In death the wicked is suddenly and irresistibly driven away from all his beloved hopes and enjoyments in his sinful state; and often, in the very act of sin, and always on account of it, into everlasting misery: but the righteous, being united to Christ, clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his indwelling Spirit, has, even in trouble and death, well-grounded hopes of eternal felicity. 33. Prudent men study to grow in grace, and in the hath understanding: but that which is in the midst of fools is made known.

34 Righteousness^a exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people.¹

35 The^b king's favour is toward a wise servant: but his wrath is against him that causeth shame.

CHAPTER XV.

A SOFT^a answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words¹ stir up anger.

2 The^b tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright: ^abut the mouth of fools ^apoureth out foolishness.

3 The^c eyes of the LORD are in every place, beholding the evil and the good.

4 A^d wholesome tongue² is a tree of life:³ but perverseness therein is a breach in the spirit.

5 A^b fool despiseth his father's instruction: but he that regardeth reproof is prudent.

finally weaken or contradict the general rule. It is now verified in every righteous judgment by an upright judge upon earth: it will finally be completed by the Judge of the quick and the dead. C.

Ver. 30. A sound heart. A sound heart is a heart restored to spiritual health by Jesus, the only physician of the soul, Mat. 9.12; and its principal symptoms are faith, hope, and love—a "conscience void of offence," because "sprinkled from dead works," which contributes as much to relieve bodily suffering, and promote bodily health, as to remove spiritual trouble and promote peace and enjoyment. C.

Ver. 33. Wisdom will neither "cast its pearls before swine, nor give that which is holy to the dogs,"—and must therefore often rest and wait for opportunities. But the vanity that is in the heart of fools is always seeking occasions for display, and acquires nothing about others if it only can glorify itself. C.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 1. Mild, submissive, and yielding answers pacify anger and wrath: but sharp, contemptuous, and impertinent language increases passion, or kindles it up where it was not before. 2. A wise man gives profitable instructions, and understands how to speak in a seasonable and prudent manner: whereas fools, by the worthless stuff they utter, and by their indiscreet and confused manner of expressing their thoughts, only manifest their own folly. 3. The infinite knowledge and observance of God extends everywhere, and to every person or action, thought, or disposition, whether good or bad. 4. Wholesome and profitable discourses instruct the ignorant, comfort the grieved, heal breaches, cure contentions among neighbours, and soften the exasperated; but corrupt, proud, passionate, and erroneous discourse disturbs the peace, and corrupts the temper and manners, of both speakers and hearers. 5. Inattention to the instructions, advices, and reproofs of superiors, manifests and issues in the greatest folly; but he who willingly receives rebukes, and carefully observes them, shows himself wise, and prudently consults his own welfare and happiness. 6. A truly pious, just, and merciful man is really very rich; as, however little of this world's wealth he may possess, he has all things working for his real advantage, and God's blessing on what he has, and is contented with it: but vexation and trouble embitter the revenues of the wicked. They are gotten with anxiety, enjoyed under a curse, employed in the service of sin, and tend to their ruin. 7. Wise men tender good instructions, advices, and reproofs to all around them: but foolish men, having their heart filled with ignorance and lust, impart nothing valuable. 8. All the external devotions and most liberal almsgivings of wicked men, are so far from recommending them to God's favour, that they are abhorred by him as but the vile gratifications of their own pride, legality, or other lusts; but the most humble prayers and meanest services of those united to Christ, which are performed in faith and dependence on him, and sincerely aiming at his glory, are exceedingly acceptable to him, and issue in much comfort to themselves. 9. The whole designs, contrivances, thoughts, words, and actions of wicked men are abominable to the Lord; and this renders their religious services corrupt and hated: but he loves such as, having Jesus' sacrificial life in their souls, do, in their thoughts, affections, and endeavours, earnestly study to perfect holiness in his fear. 10. Such as dislike faithful reproof, for their apostasy from the ways of the Lord, shall be severely punished; and at last, if they continue haters of admonition and advice, shall certainly be lost. 11. The state of the dead and lost, and every other thing unknown to us, are perfectly known to God. How exact then must be his knowledge and observance of the dispositions, purposes, and thoughts of men! 12. Mockers of God and religion shun the admonitions of their conscience, and hate such as reprove them; and even avoid the company of wise, religious, or virtuous persons, lest they should meet with their reproofs or advices. 13. When the conscience is graciously purged and quieted, and the mind comforted, it issues in outward health and cheerfulness: but grief and sorrow, seizing on the heart, disturb, weaken, and dispirit it, and make a man a burden to himself and to all around. 14. Such as are truly wise, and inwardly instructed by the Spirit of God, earnestly study to obtain more solid knowledge: but persons void of true understanding gape after, and relish nothing but frivolous, vain, and unprofitable things. 15. All the days of persons discontented under their afflictions are grievous and miserable: but they who have their conscience graciously quieted, their heart joyful in God, and content with their lot, have more true and perpetual comfort and satisfaction than can be enjoyed in the most delicious banquet on earth. 16. A very small share of earthly enjoyments, attended with real grace and true holiness, is better than the largest abundance of wealth with the disquiet, confusion, and anxious care which usually attend it. 17. The meanest fare, attended by the mutual love of friends, is far preferable to the most sumptuous entertainment attended with hatred and contention. 18. Hasty, passionate, and furious persons are apt to quarrel for very trifles, and so disturb the most peaceable company: but those who are humble, meek, and patient, instead of raising strife themselves, will labour to compose it when it has been raised by others. 19. A slothful man is apt to fancy or pretend a great many unconquerable difficulties in the way of his duty: but a good and active person looks on his way as easy and plain, notwithstanding a few trifling hindrances. 20. Nothing so much rejoices the hearts of pious parents as to see their children grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord: but foolish children requite their mothers' fond indulgence by irreverent carriage towards them; and by despising their commands, instructions, advices, or reproofs, and so making them contemptible. 21. They who are void of grace, sense, and consideration, take pleasure in doing the most empty, absurd, and wicked things: but such as are truly knowing and wise study for their own pleasure and comfort, as well as for the honour of God, to conduct their thoughts, words, and actions in a regular, sincere, and holy manner. 22. Without prudent counsellors, and for want of due deliberation, the most important designs and projects often miscarry: but where, by prudent consultation, difficulties are foreseen and provided against, men's purposes succeed to their wish. 23. Ready, pertinent, and seasonable advice is an honour and comfort to him who gives it, especially when the good success of it is found, and it is very profitable to him who receives it. 24. Holy and gracious persons, in the pursuit of everlasting life, set their affections and hopes on things above, have their conversation in heaven, and eye the glory of God in everything they do, that they may escape sinful pollutions, horrid dangers, and everlasting destruction. 25. God takes pleasure to debase the proud, demolishing their stately houses, overturning their families, and ruining their honours and wealth: but he will preserve poor widows who have no helper in their rights, against every insolent or covetous invader. 26. The Lord abhors the thoughts, inclinations, purposes, and contrivances of wicked men: but the hearts of the godly being purged by his blood and Spirit, their prayers, and edifying instructions, advices, and reproofs are pleasant to him and his people. 27. They who hasten to be rich, and with anxious care labour for worldly enjoyments, not only harass all around them, but weary themselves, and plague their families, and bring the curse of God on what they have: but he who hates bribes and other unlawful methods of gain, shall have a competent portion of the good things of this world, and comfort and prosperity in it. 28. A good man avoids answering before he is asked, and studies to say nothing but what is pure, profitable, suitable, and seasonable: but a wicked man is apt, in a rash and forward manner, to speak what is unsuitable, sinful, and hurtful. 29. The Lord utterly dislikes wicked persons, and refuses to regard their prayers: but he is ever willing and ready to hear the prayers of the godly offered to him in faith, and is their sure and present help in time of work or warfare. 30. It is a remarkable pleasure to behold the manifold works of God: and the good report of a given and offered Saviour, and of reconciliation to God and eternal salvation, or even a good report of ourselves or neighbours, affords inward satisfaction and comfort. 31. They who with pleasure listen to and improve wholesome instructions, tending to promote their spiritual or eternal life, increase in wisdom, and shall be qualified to give good instruction to others. 32. Such as refuse or condemn proper instructions or reproofs undervalue their own soul, neglect the means of its safety, and, for the sake of some outward and perishing thing, willfully ruin it: but he who delights to be taught and admonished, increases in solid, soul-comforting, and saving knowledge, wisdom, and prudence. 33. A holy awe of God, and real regard to his way, disposes us to the study of true wisdom and knowledge, and is a certain mark of it; and humility and patient submission in a low condition is the best preparation for honour and preferment.

Ver. 6. In the house of the righteous is much treasure. That is, (1) Christ the righteous, who has hid in him 'all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge'; (2) the righteous, through faith in Christ, having all the treasures of divine wisdom, faith, hope, charity, communicated by his Word and Spirit; (3) of temporal treasures, the righteous always possesses contentment, which is inseparable from godliness, and is 'great gain,' while he possesses that industry of hand which arises from freedom of spirit, and is the fruitful parent of all earthly prosperity. C.

Ver. 8. The prayer of the upright is his delight. 'The upright' are those who are not ashamed to look up with 'boldness to the throne of grace for grace to help them,' and their prayer a 'delight to the Lord,' because it renounces all the righteousness of the creature, and altogether relies upon the 'righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ.' C.

Ver. 27. He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house. By needless and distracting cares and toils, by transfusing the spirit of covetousness into his children, and by all the retributive consequences of that chicanery and oppression which covetousness is sure to generate, and Providence sooner or later to punish. C.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1. Every right inclination, thought, or purpose in the heart, and all right management of our words, come through an active faith in God. 2. Ignorance and self-conceit make men often to think themselves faultless and holy in their conduct, when the Lord, who searches and judges the intentions and frame of the heart, finds it quite otherwise. 3. Commit whatever works you undertake to the direction and management of God in his providence, and implore his blessing therein, so shall your honest desires be accomplished. 4. God made and would bring men to his own service, and for the manifestation of his glorious perfections; yea, even the wicked to be instruments of his righteous will, and at last the objects of it, by continuing in their impieties. 5. When men are inwardly proud on account of their gifts, honours, or wealth, God sees them, and will certainly punish them in their pride. 6. By God's exercise of his mercy and faithfulness in giving his Son, and fulfilling his promises, men's iniquity is expiated, pardoned, and subdued; and even by their exercise of mercy, equity, and fidelity, the punishment of sin in outward calamities is often prevented. And by the fear of God implanted in the heart, and a continued holy regard to his law, men hate, watch against, and avoid sin; and so escape the fearful consequences of it. 7. When a man makes it his habitual and earnest endeavour to receive Christ, and walk in him soberly, righteously, and godly, the Lord, or his God reconciled in Christ, inclines even those who were his foes to become his friends. 8. A small estate honestly gotten and cheerfully enjoyed, is preferable to vast incomes heaped up by oppression and kept without hospitality. 9. A man's mind fixes its end, contrives the means, and perhaps reckons upon the success: but the Lord determines the event, and orders every motion and step taken towards it. 10. The edicts, commands, and decisions of kings ought always to be directed by the unerring law of God; and their decisions ought to be so just and exact, that no man may be wronged thereby. 11. The Lord requires that, even in our private dealings, everything, even the smallest, should be managed with the most scrupulous integrity and equity. 12. Kings, being in the most exalted station, ought to be distinguished patterns of piety and virtue, and to countenance it in others, as the only security of their throne. 13. Kings ought highly to value and love sincere and faithful advisers, who truly inform them of what tends to their own and their kingdom's welfare. 14. The wrath of a king is almost as terrifying as a message of death, and, especially in despotic governments, often issues in death to its object: but virtuous and prudent courtiers will pacify it, and make a reconciliation. 15. The favours and gracious smiles of a prince are extremely reviving and comfortable, and fruitful of expected happiness, especially to such as he had been formerly incensed against. 16. But real religion, and a solid understanding to discern between good and evil, are preferable to all the wealth that kings can bestow or industry procure. 17. It is the constant aim and endeavour of upright men to decline everything that is evil, and to follow that which is good: and by heedful care of their thoughts, words, and actions, their souls and bodies are, through the grace and providence of God, preserved from destruction. 18. Pride and haughtiness are the ordinary forerunners of debasement and misery, and the means of bringing it on men. 19. It is better, in imitation of Christ and his dear saints, to submit to the meanest condition, and patiently to bear injuries, than to partake of victories, spoil, and wealth along with the proud. 20. They who understand business thoroughly, and manage it prudently and discreetly, bid fair to have good success; but it is only by trusting in God that true and everlasting happiness can be obtained. 21. They whose heart is well furnished with experimental knowledge of God's Word, take the proper method to obtain a high reputation for wisdom and prudence; and if they can with eloquence and clearness communicate their instructions, it will greatly tend to the edification of others. 22. Spiritual knowledge and grace are the beginning and earnest of eternal life, are comfortable to him who enjoys them, and useful to others: but the learning of fools is frivolous and vain; and even their instructions do but render men foolish. 23, 24. The enlightened mind of a wise man instructs him to speak judiciously and pertinently, gives weight of evidence to what he says, and renders it pleasant to the hearer, as a honeycomb is to the mouth, and nourishing and strengthening as marrow is to the bones. 25. Many are highly pleased with their own ways, even when they are such as tend to their ruin, spiritual, temporal, and eternal. 26. He that, prompted by his wants, labours in worldly employments, procures his own preservation in life: whereas he who labours in plaguing others, will find even every evil word tend to his own hurt. 27. Wicked men, with great pains, contrive and labour to do mischief, as if treasures could be gained by it: and their lying, slanderous, and insolent speeches are very injurious, painful, and destructive. 28. Persons of a perverse, passionate, and contentious spirit raise dissensions among those who are inclined to live at peace; and they who secretly defame, backbite, detract, and whisper about false stories, make breaches between the kindest neighbours and dearest relations. 29, 30. Such as are eager to do mischief, or live by violence and rapine, not content to do wrong themselves, entice others to become their companions, and then lead them into the most pernicious courses. With profound study they contrive the ruin of others; and 6 By¹ mercy and truth iniquity is purged;⁵ and by the fear of the LORD men depart from evil.

7 When¹ a man's ways please the LORD, he maketh even his enemies to beat peace with him.

8 Better¹ is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right.

9 A¹ man's heart deviseth his way: but the LORD directeth his steps.

10 A¹ divine sentence⁶ is in the lips of the king; his mouth transgresseth not in judgment.

11 A¹ just weight and balance are the LORD's: all the weights⁷ of the bag are his work.

12 It¹ is an abomination to kings to commit wickedness: for the throne is established by righteousness.

13 Righteous¹ lips are the delight of kings;⁸ and they love him that speaketh right.

14 The¹ wrath of a king is as messengers of death: but a wise man will pacify it.

15 In¹ the light of the king's countenance is life; and his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.

16 How¹ much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver?

17 The¹ highway of the upright is to depart from evil: he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul.

18 Pride¹ goeth before destruction; and an haughty spirit before a fall.

19 Better¹ it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.

20 He that handleth a matter¹ wisely shall find good; and whoso trusteth in the LORD, happy is he.

²¹ This doubtless refers to the manner in which execution was, and still is, in the East, performed upon persons who were high enough to incur the immediate wrath of the king. This may be explained by an account of the usage in Persia. When the king has determined on the death of a governor of a province, an order for his execution is made out, sealed with the royal signet, and consigned to an officer appointed for the purpose. This man rides post. Then, presenting himself to the principal person of the place, he shows the royal mandate, and forces the individual to accompany him, and lend him assistance. He enters the house of the condemned, walks straight up to his victim, places the warrant 21 The¹ wise in heart shall be called prudent; and the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning.

22 Understanding¹ is a well-spring of life unto him that hath it: but the instruction of fools is folly.

23 The¹ heart of the wise teacheth² his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips.

24 Pleasant¹ words are as a honey-comb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones.

25 There¹ is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.

26 He that laboureth, laboureth for himself; for his mouth craveth it of him.⁵

27 An¹ ungodly man⁶ diggeth up evil; and in his lips there is as a burning fire.

28 A¹ froward man soweth⁷ strife; and a whisperer separateth chief friends.

29 A¹ violent man enticeth his neighbour, and leadeth him into the way that is not good.

30 He¹ shutteth his eyes to devise froward things; moving his lips he bringeth evil to pass.

31 The¹ hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness.

32 He¹ that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.

33 The¹ lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the LORD.⁸

CHAPTER XVII.

BETTER is a dry morsel,¹ and quietness therewith, than an house full of sacrifices³ with strife.

2 A wise servant shall have rule over a son that causeth shame, and shall have part of the inheritance among the brethren.

then, by their advice, or giving of the sign, it is furiously effected.—33. Events appear fortuitous, as the lot which is cast into the lap of a garment or into a hollow vessel: but all things are regulated by exact law; and nothing, at least in nature, happens but according to his eternal mind, and by the particular regulation of his will.

Ver. 1. Various changes of translation have been proposed in this verse, all tending to say that 'man hath the disposing of the heart,' but the answer, or power to answer with the tongue, is from the LORD. But by whatever authorities supported, these changes are certainly to be rejected: for surely the thoughts of the heart are as much in the hand of God as are the answers of the tongue. The translation of Holden is to be preferred: 'The deliberations of the heart in man, and the utterance of the tongue, are from Jehovah.' C.

Ver. 4. The wicked for the day of evil. It does not mean that God created the wicked on purpose to condemn them eternally. God created man upright, and for his own glory; man, by the abuse of his free will, fell from the estate wherein he was created, and the finally impenitent God hath appointed to a righteous sentence in the day of final judgment. 'The evil day for the evil-doer.' C.

Ver. 10. Such a sentence is ever in the lips of Christ the King in Zion; and such should ever be in the lips of earthly kings, who, whether they know it and regard it or not, reign by him and for him, and stand accountable as stewards at his awful throne of judgment. C.

Ver. 12. The throne is established by righteousness. A throne may be upheld by unjust war, usurpation, and oppression; but can be established in peace, prosperity, and permanence by righteousness alone. C.

Ver. 15. A cloud of the latter rain. 'The cloud of the latter rain,' promising gentle showers, was considered as the promise of an abundant harvest. C.

Ver. 21. Graceful, unaffected, and earnest speech will induce others to listen and learn.—Note. While speech, both in thought and manner, is truly a gift, it is the duty of every Christian to improve what he possesses, so as to commend the truth first to the ear, and then to the heart of men. A careless utterance, with an ungainly and offensive action, are, in public instructors, not always mere defects, but may be sins—sins of neglect, which cannot be palliated, and should not be defended. C.

Ver. 26. Work was prescribed to man even in innocence, Ge. 2.15, but toil was inflicted as a curse on sin. Yet such is the mercy of God that he would, by its imperative demands upon industry, and even toil, counteract a thousand greater evils that abundance and luxury would infallibly entail. C.

Ver. 31. Way of righteousness. That is, following and longing after Jesus, the Lord our only righteousness. C.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 1. The meanest fare, enjoyed in peace with God and our neighbour, and with quietness in our own mind, is better than the most sumptuous cheer, attended with lawling, contention, and strife. 2. A pious and prudent servant ought to be preferred to a foolish and wicked child, and deserves a share of the inheritance in a family. 3. As gold and silver are tried and purified in the fire, so the Lord, who searches the hearts of all men, proves and refines his own people from their sinful dross in the furnace of affliction.—6. It is an honour to parents to have a numerous posterity walking in holiness and virtue; and it is the honour of children to have pious and prudent ancestors.—8. Presents and bribes appear so lovely and tempting, that few can refuse them, or decline gratifying the desire of the giver. 9. Overlooking of injuries, and mutual forbearance, is the best way to preserve and increase friendship and love: but repeating old faults breaks the strictest bonds of friendship, and makes an irreconcilable separation.—11. Some men are so wilful and refractory, that, shaking off all reverence to God and their superiors, they are wholly and irremediably bent on mischief; they must therefore be cut off by some exemplary punishment. 12. It is less dangerous to meet a bear in the heat of his rage, than a furious fool in the pursuit of his unruly passions and desires.—14. When men begin a quarrel, it gradually becomes more and more violent and extensive, till it is with difficulty made up: it is best therefore to check and stifle all contentions in the beginning. 16. In his mysterious providence, God gives to many foolish persons natural abilities, worldly substance, and opportunities of learning wisdom; and yet gives them no sense or inclination to desire it. 17. A true friend continues constant in his affection and usefulness, however our circumstances alter: and a brother, who deserves the name, is especially kind and helpful in a time of adversity. 18. He is extremely foolish whose kindness hurries him into rash suretyship for the debts of others, especially when they are suspected of knavery. 19. He certainly loves wickedness who accustoms himself to brawling and contention: and he who carries himself proudly, scornfully, and contemptuously towards others, lives above his estate, and builds sumptuous houses, hurries himself into ruin; and breakers of the public peace open wide the flood-gates to all impiety. 20. A man of wicked devices, which he resolves to accomplish by any means, shall find himself deceived in his expectations of good: and a false, deceitful, and self-inconsistent tongue will prove the ruin of its owner. 22. Nothing more conduces to health than solid quietness of conscience, and a moderate cheerfulness of spirit: but excessive sadness and grief waste the body, and dry it up to a mere skeleton. 23. Many wicked persons, who would refuse an open bribe, will willingly enough take bribes or presents secretly, in order to influence them to give counsel or judgment contrary to law and equity. 24. A pious and prudent man has his mind fixed upon the unerring oracles of God, and has his sense and wisdom at hand to guide and govern him; but a foolish one has his thoughts always wandering and roving about impertinences, and is never in 4 The^d words of a man's mouth are as deep

Ver. 25. The sorrows inflicted upon fathers and mothers by Polish children are not here (and in ver. 21) enumerated as evils

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 1. While self-conceited persons seek to distinguish themselves by their high pretences to wisdom, and inconstant ones seek but never find satisfaction, they who have a true desire of knowledge disengage themselves from all avocations, in order to study true wisdom. 2. A vain man studies knowledge or even religion, for no other end but to make a show with it. 3. Wherever wicked men come, they bring their contempt of God and reproaching of religion along with them, which will at last issue in contempt and misery to themselves. 4. A wise man's words, as deep waters, flow calmly, and contain the deep mysteries of God: and his heart, being full of wisdom, is ever sending forth streams of instructive, refreshing, quickening, and fructifying influences to all around him. 5. It is exceeding great wickedness to pervert justice, and, through favour or interest, to condemn and acquit the wicked, or to give the cause against a righteous man through prejudice or partiality. 6, 7. Fools, by meddling in other men's quarrels, or by speeches irritating others against them, procure mischief, and even lasting and eternal ruin to themselves. 8. The slanders and reproaches of tale-bearers, however covered over with pretences of sorrow, and howsoever greedily they be received by the hearers, like mortal and incurable wounds, pierce to and rankle the very heart. 9. Idleness and prodigality are nearly allied, and both issue in the ruin of the persons guilty of them. Negligence about our soul is as fatal as open and avowed ungodliness. 10. Jesus Christ, and all the perfections, promises, and providences of God in him, are an impregnable defence and satisfaction to all such as by faith flee to him: no enemy then can ever hurt them. 11. It is only in his own conceit that the rich man's wealth appears a mean of remarkable safety either here or hereafter. 12. Pride in prosperity, forgetfulness of God, and despising of others, are certain means and forerunners of destruction: and humility, meekness, and patience, in a low condition, are the best preparation for honour and preferment. 13. He who, to show his quick parts, or through a forwardness of temper, answers to a matter before he hears it fully and understands it, shames himself, and manifests his folly. 14. A manly spirit, especially if encouraged and supported by the influences of the Holy Ghost, will bear up under manifold and sore calamities of an external kind: but if the spirit be wounded with melancholy dejection, and a sense of God's wrath, how insupportable is the case, till Jesus, by his blood and grace, give relief! 15. Prudent persons, by diligent meditation, and by attentive listening to instruction, labour to increase more and more in wisdom. 16. There are few men so mean, base, or wicked, but large gifts and presents will procure their release from prison, nay, bring them into favour with great men, or even to the honour of waiting upon princes. 17. They who are first in representing their case, ordinarily make it to appear right, and even process the judge in their favour; but by diligent search into their allegations, their neighbours often find innumerable mistakes in their representations. 18. In HANGMAN'S TREE, DAMASCUS. [Proverbs, xviii.]—David conquered and garrisoned the city of Damascus during his reign, and during a part of the reign of Solomon Damascus was under the dominion of Israel. The Proverbs of Solomon were written about one thousand years before Christ. We place this picture to illustrate the eighteenth chapter of Proverbs, because in some degree Damascus is connected with the beginning of the reign of Solomon in Israel. Damascus occupies the most beautiful site in Western Asia. It lies at the eastern pass of Anti-Libanus in a vast plain of great fertility, watered by the Abana and Pharpar rivers. In the center of this plain, which without the rivers would be an arid desert, in the midst of dense masses of foliage, there glisten the minarets from the mosques of Damascus. Seen at a distance it looks like a dream, a vision starting up from the desert.

CHAPTER XX.

WINE is* a mocker, strong drink is* raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

2 The* fear of a king is as the roaring of a lion; whoso provoketh him to anger sinneth against his own soul.*

3 It* is an honour for a man to cease from strife: but every fool will be meddling.

4 The* sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold;* therefore* shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing.

5 Counsel* in the heart of man is like deep water: but a man of understanding will draw it out.

6 Most* men will proclaim every one his own goodness;* but a faithful man who can find?

7 The* just man walketh in his integrity; his children are blessed after him.

8 A* king that sitteth in the throne of judgment scattereth away all evil with his eyes.

9 Who* can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?*

10 Divers weights,* and divers measures, both of them are alike abomination to the LORD.

11 Even* a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.

12 The* hearing ear, and the seeing eye, the LORD hath made even both of them.

13 Love* not sleep, lest thou come to poverty; open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread.

14 It* is naught, it is naught, saith the of ruin; but the tokens of his favour greatly refresh and invigorate their spirits. 13. An ignorant, headstrong, and impious son is a plague and grief to his parents; and a contentious wife is a gradual ruin to her family, so perpetually vexing her husband that he can scarcely live with her. 14. Persons may have houses and riches left them by parents; but a prudent wife is not obtained, even by diligent care, without the peculiar direction and blessing of the Lord. 15. Sloth and idleness sink the mind into a dull stupidity and unconcern, and thereby reduce men to extreme beggary and want. 16. He who carefully keeps the commandments of God as the rule of his life, secures the welfare of his own soul: but he that lives at random, led only by his own brutish inclinations, shall be miserable in time and in eternity. 17. He who compassionately relieves the necessities of the poor really enriches himself; as what he gives is but lent to the Lord, and shall be repaid, with large interest and increase of blessings, upon him and his posterity. 18. Children ought to be faithfully corrected before they are fixed in evil habits and customs; nor ought their cryings or entreaties make parents abate the necessary severity towards them. 19. Men given to passion and fury bring themselves into great mischiefs: and if we extricate them out of one danger, they will quickly involve themselves in another. 20. To listen to instruction, and kindly receive reproofs, or even corrections, is the proper way to attain much solid and lasting wisdom and experience. 21. Many are the purposes and contrivances of men, and they often lay them with great care: but it is only the will of the Lord which is able to bring to pass whatsoever is best. 22. A desire to do good to others is a real kindness to them, though it be not in our power to effect it. And a poor man who would fail do us good, is better than one who promises much and does little. 23. True godliness, and a religious care to please the Lord in all things, increase a spiritual life, and issue in life eternal. They afford the most satisfying comfort in God's favour, produce the most agreeable contentment with our lot, and are an excellent preservative both from sin and from suffering. 24. Sluggards are so much given to laziness and idle sauntering, that they can hardly be persuaded to take their meat or do the most necessary and easy things. 25. Incurable sinners, and particularly scoffers at religion and despisers of reproof, ought to be severely punished, as a warning to such as are inconsiderate; but such as are wise and prudent will need no more but a gentle reproof to make them learn their duty and practise accordingly. 26. Children, who by their debaucheries waste their father's substance and deal unkindly with their mother, disgrace their parents, and at last render themselves infamous and miserable. 27. Great care ought to be taken to avoid listening to false doctrine, sinful advice, or even idle and frothy language, as it tends to make us wander from the true doctrines of Christ and practice of holiness. 28. An impious witness, whose conscience is so hardened that he can swear to anything, laughs at all law and justice, and even at the threatened judgment of God upon perjured persons: and the mouth of the wicked utters the most false, sinful, and mischievous speeches with greediness. 29. But terrible judgments shall certainly be inflicted upon those that scoff at conscience and religion; and indelible marks of God's displeasure shall be inflicted on those who slight good instructions.

Ver. 2. He that hasteth with his feet sinneth. He that hasteth with his feet, without judging by his head—who, more forward than thoughtful—must end in sin. C.

Ver. 3. Fretteth against the Lord. The elephant, the rhinoceros, the lion, and the tiger are often inclosed within cages. When wild they fret and strive, but soon learn that resistance is vain and submission good; but unrenewed man, less wise than the beasts that perish, fretteth against the Lord, and striveth to the end against his Maker. Grace alone can teach him to say, 'Let the Lord do what seemeth him good': 'Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.' C.

Ver. 7. The word 'hate' must evidently be understood in the comparative sense of Lu. 14. 26. And where poverty arises from idleness, indiscretion, or wastefulness, the coldness of brethren and friends, so far from being criminal, may be a righteous judgment and retribution. In other cases, however, it may indicate a criminal want of sympathy; and in the case of Christ Jesus our Lord, was exhibited in the highest form of guiltiness. Had our Lord come in riches, splendour, and earthly pride, the Pharisees would have worshipped him whom they bought and crucified. C.

Ver. 13. Dropping. The dropping of water through the flat roofs of eastern houses must have been a common occurrence. It would bring (1) a disagreeable noise; (2) defilement of furniture and dress; (3) in the end rottenness; (4) disease. C.

Ver. 19. An ill-tempered man will, in the end, come to punishment: for though his friend deliver him again and again, he will at last offend beyond all power of apology or intercession. C.

Ver. 22. Kindness. The most amiable quality is kindness. With it a man of inferior mental attainments is esteemed; without it the highest accomplishments can never secure esteem or confidence. C.

Ver. 24. His bosom. Rather 'in the dish,' meaning that out of which the Orientals eat with the hand. See Mat. xxiii. The meaning is the slothful, even when his hand is filled with opportunities and means of success, will not lift up his hand to provide for his own support. C.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 1. Immoderate drinking of wine, or other intoxicating liquors, exposes men to the jest and detestation of others; it makes themselves abusive and scurrilous, mocking even at sacred things, and renders them like fools, sots, or madmen, furious, tumultuous, and quarrelsome: while it seems to exhilarate the spirits, it deceitfully drowns both reason and conscience, and tends to the ruin of both soul and buyer; but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

21 An^c inheritance may be gotten hastily⁴ at the beginning; but the end thereof shall not be blessed.

22 Say^d not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the LORD, and he shall save thee.

23 Divers^e weights are an abomination unto the LORD; and a false balance⁵ is not good.

24 Man's^f goings are of the LORD; how can a man then understand his own way?

25 It^g is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and after vows to make inquiry.

26 A wise king scattereth the wicked, and bringeth the wheel⁶ over them.

27 The^h spirit of man is the candle⁷ of the LORD, searching all the inward parts of the belly.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE king's^a heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water:¹ he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 Every^b way of a man is right in his own eyes: but the LORD pondereth the hearts.

3 To^c do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.²

4 An^e high look,³ and a proud heart, and the ploughing⁴ of the wicked⁵ is sin.

5 The^d thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but of every one that is hasty, only to want.

6 The^e getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.⁶

7 The^f robbery of the wicked shall destroy them;⁷ because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The^g way of man is froward and strange: but as⁸ for the pure, his work is right.

9 It^h is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top,⁸ than with a brawling woman⁹ in a wide house.¹

10 Theⁱ soul of the wicked desireth evil: his neighbour findeth no favour² in his eyes.

11 When^j the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise; and when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

12 The^k righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.

13 Whoso^l stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.

14 A^m gift in secret pacifieth anger; and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

15 Itⁿ is joy to the just to do judgment: but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

16 The^o man that wandereth out of the way into our confidence, and then betray us.

20. Slighters, revilers, abusers, and wishers of mischief to parents, bring fearful and lasting ruin on themselves and posterity, however they may prosper for a time.

21. Many, by unrighteous courses, quickly become rich: but the foundation being laid in rapine, extortion, or fraud, it shall quickly waste away, or prove a curse to such as enjoy it.

22. Never revenge injuries received; but commit thy cause to God who judges righteously; wait patiently in the use of lawful means for the fulfilment of his promises, and he will vindicate and deliver thee in his own time.

23. Injustice, even in the smallest things, is so extremely abominable to God, that it cannot be too much hated or avoided.

24. Men's thoughts, words, and actions are all directed by God to his own ends: and none can certainly know beforehand what will be the issue of them.

25. A sacrilegious converting of what pertains to God to our own private use, and studying how to be loosed from the obligations of solemn vows, terribly ensnare men's souls, and bring certain ruin upon them.

26. Pious and prudent magistrates exert themselves to discourage and terrify the wicked, and punish them with proper severity.

27. The rational soul and conscience, especially when renewed by the Spirit of God, act as his deputies; discovering, judging, accusing, or approving whatever passes within us, according as it is contrary or conformable to God's revealed will.

28. Bounty and clemency, joined with justice and faithfulness to their body. 2. The just wrath of a king is terrible: and they that offend him, by exasperating language or behaviour, expose themselves to temporal and lasting ruin. 3. It is honourable to avoid contention to the utmost, and to get out of it as quickly as possible, by confessing our own faults, and forgiving those of our neighbours: but foolish and wicked persons are always ready to begin or maintain quarrels. 4. Such as, through indolence and self-indulgence, neglect their business in its proper season, may expect beggary and misery; while they who are diligent enjoy abundant felicity. 5. Some men, through their reservedness of temper, and others through deep design, conceal their intentions: but persons of great sagacity will discover them, or even by their artful insinuations make themselves to declare them. 6. Most men will boast how friendly, humane, charitable, and generous they are: but it is hard to find one answerable in deeds to his trust, his relation, his promises, or pretences. 7. Justified and gracious persons, by their practice, manifest the sincerity of their heart and profession; and their children are blessed of God and regarded by men on their account. 8. A king who makes it his business to execute judgment and justice faithfully, effectually suppresses crimes and impieties by his strict inspection of affairs. 9. No man on earth is perfectly free from sin in heart or life, nor can he make himself so. 10. To buy with larger weights or measures, and sell with lesser ones, and all other injustice, is extremely detestable to God. 11. Men's continued practice is the surest mark of their disposition, and by that the future conversation of young persons may be guessed at; and yet they, even children, often strangely conceal their vices. 12. All our natural faculties and senses, and the right use of them, are from God, and therefore ought to be employed for his glory. 13. Immoderate sleep, or other slothfulness, wastes our time and draws on poverty and want: but watchful care and diligent labours are the means of obtaining everything necessary. 14. Some, while they buy goods, will dishonestly and falsely cry them down, and yet afterwards boast of their good bargain and cheating the seller. 15. Wise and gracious speeches, proceeding from a wise and understanding heart, are more valuable than all the gold, pearls, or precious things on earth. 16. Never trust him, without a proper pledge, who rashly becomes surety for everybody, strangers and harlots not excepted; for he will quickly be reduced to beggary. 17. Gains, honours, and pleasures, acquired by unrighteous courses, may at first be extremely agreeable to men; but they will at last produce anguish of conscience, pangs of repentance, or torments of despair. 18. Deliberation with ourselves, and consulting with others who are prudent, is the way to obtain success in our undertakings, especially in matters of importance and danger. 19. It is always necessary to suspect flatterers, and to turn a deaf ear to tale-bearers, who, by treacherously revealing the secrets which others have intrusted to them, labour to insinuate themselves into our confidence, and then betray us. 20. Slighters, revilers, abusers, and wishers of mischief to parents, bring fearful and lasting ruin on themselves and posterity, however they may prosper for a time. 21. Many, by unrighteous courses, quickly become rich: but the foundation being laid in rapine, extortion, or fraud, it shall quickly waste away, or prove a curse to such as enjoy it. 22. Never revenge injuries received; but commit thy cause to God who judges righteously; wait patiently in the use of lawful means for the fulfilment of his promises, and he will vindicate and deliver thee in his own time. 23. Injustice, even in the smallest things, is so extremely abominable to God, that it cannot be too much hated or avoided. 24. Men's thoughts, words, and actions are all directed by God to his own ends: and none can certainly know beforehand what will be the issue of them. 25. A sacrilegious converting of what pertains to God to our own private use, and studying how to be loosed from the obligations of solemn vows, terribly ensnare men's souls, and bring certain ruin upon them. 26. Pious and prudent magistrates exert themselves to discourage and terrify the wicked, and punish them with proper severity. 27. The rational soul and conscience, especially when renewed by the Spirit of God, act as his deputies; discovering, judging, accusing, or approving whatever passes within us, according as it is contrary or conformable to God's revealed will. 28. Bounty and clemency, joined with justice and faithfulness to their of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

17 He^a that loveth pleasure³ shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.⁴

18 The^a wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.⁵

19 It^a is better to dwell in the wilderness,⁶ than with a contentious and an angry woman.

20 There^a is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise: ^bbut a foolish man spendeth it up.

21 He^a that followeth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, righteousness, and honour.

22 A^a wise man scaleth the city of the mighty, and casteth down the strength of the confidence thereof.

23 Whoso^a keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles.

24 Proud^a and haughty scorner is his name who dealeth in proud wrath.⁷

25 The^a desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.

1 Chosen, not as a thing that can be got by a wish, but as an object to be sought after by faith, love, and humility before God, and truth, and industry, and uprightness before men.
2 Or, favour is better than, &c., ch. 17. 1.
3 They 'meet together,' it may be, not in companionship, but in interest; and are dependent for their individual happiness upon the discharge of their common duties. The Lord must be true to one another, and woe to that party by whom his will is disregarded!—C.

CHAPTER XXII.

A GOOD^a name is rather to be chosen¹ than great riches, and loving favour rather ²than silver and gold.

2 The^a rich and poor meet together;³ the LORD is the maker of them all.

3 A^a prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: ^abut the simple pass on, and are punished.

word, are principal means of securing the government of princes, and entailing their kingdom on their posterity. 29. Strength, vigour, and courage render young men respected, but gravity, wisdom, and experience are the peculiar ornaments of the aged. 30. Severe corrections are necessary to restrain or reclaim some stubborn and obstinate tempers, and to purge out those corrupt affections which are lodged in the heart.

Ver. 6. Generosity is much more common than fidelity: ostentation of generosity more common still. Fidelity to man is not uncommon in the sense of honesty; but in the sense of love, admonition, rebuke, and prayer, how seldom is it to be found! Above all, while men glory in their generosity with the gifts of God, who is faithful in service to the Giver? C.

Ver. 10. This is not confined to mere commercial integrity, but embraces all relative duties, whether between ourselves and our neighbours, or ourselves and God. Take one of the latter, as one of the most neglected, because spiritual and invisible. We expect gratitude of men for all our kindness: do we similarly weigh and measure our gratitude to God? We ask forgiveness of him daily for all our trespasses; do we employ the same weight and measure towards them that trespass against us? C.

Ver. 16. Never place confidence in a thoughtless fool who pledges his word, character, or credit for a stranger who has inveigled him. Above all, never trust an abandoned libertine, who, being 'joined to an harlot,' is disavowed from Christ, 1 Co. 6. 15; 16; and who, careless about his own soul, will never be faithful to your interest farther than he is bound by ties of law, and constrained by his compulsions. C.

Ver. 27. The thoughts of the natural man are chiefly directed to 'what he shall eat and what he shall drink,' Lu. 12. 22, 30; nay, his 'god is his belly,' Phi. 3. 19. But the spirit of the renewed man is the candle of the Lord, searching out and mortifying all the deeds of the body that the soul may live. C.

Ver. 30. The blueness of a wound, &c. Some wounds do occasionally assume a bluish tinge; but it is always an unhealthy symptom, and unfavourable to healing. The word 'blueness' should rather be rendered suppuration, which brings the description into accordance with the ordinary process of healing. C.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 1. The wills, inclinations, and purposes of kings and others, are entirely under the eye and observation of God: and he would turn them into right paths as surely as the gardener or husbandman manages his canals of water. 2. Men, through their self-love, often fancy their own purposes and works to be extremely right; while the Lord, who perfectly knows their hearts, observes them to be very defective or sinful. 3. Uprightness of heart, and holiness and virtue of life, are more pleasing to God than the most pompous devotions or the most liberal benefactions or alms. 4. Not only the insolence, pride, and ambition of wicked men are criminal before God, but all their natural, civil, and moral actions, and all their worldly greatness and prosperity lead to sin; and all they do is sinful in its principle, manner, and end. 5. Prudent contrivances and laborious industry are the proper means of plenty and affluence: but hasty resolutions, precipitant measures, and unjust methods involve men in trouble and loss. 6. The getting of wealth by lying, flattery, calumny, or perjury, is a beguiling and unprofitable course, however much used by such as walk in ways leading to destruction; and the wealth thus obtained is as unsubstantial and transient as heaps of chaff or clouds of smoke before the wind. 7. The injuries which wicked men do to others, in rendering their families poor or desolate, shall, in most ruinous punishments, be returned upon their own heads, because they are wilfully bent upon their unjust dealings. 8. The whole temper and course of a wicked man are contrary to the law and nature of God, and odious to him: but they whose consciences are washed in Jesus' blood, and their hearts renewed by his grace, walk in good works, acceptable to God and profitable to men. 9. Better is it to live poorly and solitary in the open air, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, or to be thrust into some little corner, than have a spacious house and numerous family governed by a contentious wife, whose perpetual scolding and brawling, on the smallest occasion, is more intolerable than thunder, lightning, or blustering winds. 10. A wicked man's heart desires to be ever doing mischief, and to have others falling into it: nor will he spare good or bad, friend or foe, if, by reproach or otherwise, they stand in the way of his covetousness, ambition, or other lusts. 11. When obstinate scoffers at the laws of God and men are punished in providence or by the magistrates; others, particularly such as they have seduced, will bethink themselves what they are doing: and wise men will improve instructions and admonitions, to render themselves wiser and better. 12. While righteous magistrates search the houses of the wicked for ill-gotten goods, and in order that they may be duly punished and deprived of power to do further mischief, godly men, in order to deter them from like courses, consider the judgment and ruin which God brings on the wicked for their sins. 13. They who refuse to help the poor in distress shall be reduced to misery themselves, and have none to pity or help them. 14. Presents, especially if secretly and prudently given, have a powerful influence to appease angry and wrathful men. 15. The execution of justice, and the practice of holiness and virtue, are a pleasure to the righteous; but are a terror and burden to the wicked, whom God and the magistrates shall concur to destroy. 16. He that will not live according to the directions of God's Word, but follows the conduct of his own lusts and passions, shall, after all his extravagances, be for ever fixed in hell. 17. Voluptuous persons destroy their own pleasures by wasting their estates; and they who are given to costly and delicious feeding can never thrive. 18. Wicked men often fall into the very miseries which they had prepared for the godly; and in times of common calamity are often severely punished that the righteous may be delivered. 20. True wisdom enables men to procure what is necessary for their families, and to enjoy it with satisfaction; but foolish persons lavishly waste what they neither know how to get or how to live without. 21. They who make it their business to receive and improve Jesus Christ and his righteousness and grace, in a life of holiness and virtue, shall find every new-covenant blessing in time and eternity. 22. Wise men, by their prudence, kindness, and perseverance, can effect the most difficult enterprises, and do more than others who have much more strength. 23. Restraint of the tongue from impure, false, profane, rash, injurious language, greatly preserves men from troubles, embarrassments, and miseries. 24. Pride, insolence, and outrageous words only render men infamous and contemptible. 25, 26. The slothful man is killed by an insatiable desire after that which he has not and will not labour for; but pious and diligent persons have enough for themselves, and also wherewith to relieve others. 27. All the appearances of devotion and piety about unrenowned persons being hypocritical, proceeding from a wicked principle, done in a wicked manner, and to a wicked end, are abominable to God. 28. The testimony, character, and soul of a false witness shall quickly be ruined: but he that speaks nothing but what he knows to be true, is fixed and invariable in his attestations. 29. Impenitent sinners refuse to blush at their abominations, and obstinately resolve to go on in them; but sincere saints carefully conduct their thoughts, words, and actions by the rule of God's Word. 30. No projects, however wisely laid or prudently conducted, can defeat or alter the purposes or counteract the providence of God. 31. Neither horses, chariots, nor powerful armies can obtain victories, or even protect their owners: but all safety and salvation are of and through faith in Christ himself.

Ver. 7. The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them. There are two views of the subject. (1) Several nations live by robbery, and reckon it an honourable employment. Yet, in the end, all such communities, like the piratical Algerines and murderous Thugs, are brought to destruction. (2) There is a robbery of God when he is defrauded of that worship, honour, and glory that are due to his name, which must finally terminate in the destruction of the guilty, Mal. 3. 9. C.

Ver. 13. Not 'he that stoppeth his ear at the importunity of the poor' is condemned, for that importunity is often the result of vice, idleness, or fraud; but he that disregards 'their cry' when it arises, as in a child, from want or pain that they cannot supply or relieve. C.

Ver. 22. Never did the world appear in a more hopeless state than a little before the dawn of the blessed Reformation. The human mind was enslaved to authority and tradition—an authority without charter from God, a tradition without name, till manufactured on emergency. The consciences of men were prostrate before the shrine of the confessional: their spirits were terrified into cowardly submission by the fires of an imaginary purgatory; and the walls of spiritual Babylon were high, as unto heaven. Yet these walls were scaled, and this city was taken, not by 'power nor by might,' but by a few 'wise men'—men 'made wise unto salvation' by the Scriptures (2 Ti. 3. 15), and strong and victorious by the Spirit of truth, and love, and holiness. C.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 1. A good character,

4 By^a humility,⁴ and the fear of the LORD,⁴ are riches, and honour, and life.

5 Thorns^a and snares are in the way of the froward: he that doth keep his soul shall be far from them.

6 Train^a up⁵ a child in the way⁶ he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it.

7 The^a rich ruleth over the poor; and the borrower is servant to the lender.⁷

8 He^a that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity; and the rod of his anger shall fail.⁸

9 He^a that hath a bountiful eye⁹ shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor.

10 Cast^a out the scorner, and contention shall go out; yea, strife and reproach shall cease.

11 He^a that loveth pureness of heart, for the grace of his lips¹ the king shall be his friend.²

12 The^a eyes of the LORD preserve knowledge; and he overthroweth the words³ of the transgressor.

13 The^a slothful man saith, *There is a lion without, I shall be slain in the streets.*⁴

14 The^a mouth of strange women is a deep pit: he that is abhorred of the LORD shall fall therein.

15 Foolishness^a is bound in the heart of a child; but the^a rod of correction shall drive it far from him.

16 He^a that oppresses the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.

17 Bow^a down thine ear, and hear the words of the wise, and apply thine heart unto my knowledge:

18 For^a it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee;⁵ they shall withal be fitted in thy lips.⁶

qualifying men to be useful for God in their generation, and the noted respect and friendship of those among whom we live, are more honourable and comfortable than all the riches of the world. 2. The rich by their wealth and the poor by their labour are mutual supports of each other, and ought to live together in harmony and kindness, as the same Lord made them both, and appointed them their respective conditions. 3. Prudent men foresee calamities or temptations when approaching, and use proper means for securing themselves; but foolish and inconsiderate persons go on securely in their sins and are ruined. 4. True humility and real godliness are the certain way to honour and happiness in this world and in that which is to come. 5. Wicked men meet with much trouble and danger in their sinful ways: but he that takes proper care of his soul shall be preserved therefrom, and enjoy manifold blessings. 6. Let children be carefully instructed in the truths and accustomed to the ways of God as early and earnestly as possible, and they will retain the impression, and practise the same, as long as they live. 7. Rich men domineer over the poor; and they who borrow are obliged to depend on the will and pleasure of the lender. 8. He whose common practice is to do mischief shall be paid in his own coin, with misery and trouble; and at length his power of wronging others shall be taken from him. 9. They who compassionately observe the wants of the poor, and cheerfully relieve them, shall be largely rewarded of God. 10. The removal of graceless persons, who scorn all good counsels, from a society, is an excellent mean to compose the contentions therein, and to prevent strifes and mutual reproaches for the future. 11. He that loves and practises sincerity and plain-heartedness, will recommend himself even to princes, by the piety, pleasantness, and candour of his discourse. 12. God, in his providence, carefully preserves his own oracles and ordinances among men, and provides for, preserves, and honours all who through faith are made wise unto salvation: but he overrules the counsels and designs of the wicked and perfidious. 13. Slothful persons imagine mighty hinderances in the way of their duty, where there are none, or at least very few. 14. Nothing is so dangerous, so eternally dangerous, as the ensnaring flatteries of whorish women, and the enslaving influence of fleshly lust. If a man be ensnared by them, nothing but infinite mercy and power can prevent his utter and everlasting destruction. And seldom are any, who have not provoked the Lord by former wickedness, permitted to fall into these snares. 15. False opinions and bad inclinations adhere so closely to the minds of children, that not only instructions and reproofs, but even seasonable and duly severe chastisements, must remove their obstinate folly. 16. He that by violence or fraud oppresses the poor to enrich himself, or gives to the rich what he took from the poor, or what he should give to relieve their wants, shall himself be reduced to want and beggary. 17. Attend diligently, and consider seriously, the counsels and precepts of wise men, and particularly those given in this book. 18. For it will afford thee great satisfaction heartily to embrace, thoroughly to digest, and faithfully to preserve them in thy mind: and by these means thou wilt be qualified to instruct others in them. 19.

Men who are quick and dexterous, but prudent, in despatching whatever business is committed to them, are in a fair way to be preferred to some honourable employment in the service of their prince.

Ver. 7. The rich ruleth over the poor. This should not generate either tyranny in the one, or envy in the other. It is an arrangement of Providence for mutual good—the child that obeys is as much blessed as the parent that rules. And so, where rich and poor alike fear God, the poor is as happy as the rich. C.

Ver. 15. The rod of correction. Be it never forgotten by parents, that 'the rod' signifies not exclusively an instrument of punishment, but authority and power; and that 'correction' consequently is not confined to corporal punishment, but extended to every means by which the mind may be corrected by wise precept, godly example, or rational restraint. C.

Ver. 16. Giveeth to the rich. Giveeth bribes to the rich, as is common in eastern despotisms, to induce them to overlook and countenance his oppressions. The whole history of the pashas of Western Asia is a striking commentary upon this important doctrine of sacred political economy. C.

Ver. 17. From ver. 17-21 there is either a preface to a new division of the book of Proverbs, or a conclusion from the foregoing instructions. The latter view seems most congenial to ver. 19, 20. C.

Ver. 27. This is a warning against dishonest suretiship, by them that have 'nothing to pay.' The deducible rule is the only one consistent with Christian integrity, viz. that no man should be surety for another beyond what he is able and, if need be, willing to pay for him. C.

CHAPTER XXIII. Ver. 1. When you are honoured with a seat at the table of a great man, remember that you are in danger if you take not heed to your behaviour, considering what and how you eat, what and how you speak, and to whom. 2. And avoid, as you would avoid death, every approach to intemperance and folly in language, as well as excess in eating and

CHAPTER XXIV. Ver. 1. Never envy the prosperity of wicked men, nor desire any intimacy or connection with them. 2. For they contrive and labour to ruin others that themselves may become rich and great; and by lies, calumnies, and the like, they labour to undo them: but such conduct will at last bring destruction upon their own head. 3-6. True godliness, attended with prudence and diligence, is the proper method to procure estates, raise families, get wealth, strength, or victory. 7. Solid knowledge, and serious and sensible discourse, are above the reach of foolish inconsiderate persons; nor can they judge or advise to any purpose in public concerns. 8. The more art and contrivance there is in doing evil, the more malignity

5 A^a wise man is^a strong; yea, a man of knowledge increaseth strength.⁴

6 For^a by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counsellors there is safety.⁵

7 Wisdom^a is too high for a fool; he openeth not his mouth in the gate.

8 He^a that deviseth to do evil^a shall be called a mischievous person.

9 The^a thought of foolishness is sin; and the scorner is an abomination to men.

10 If^a thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small.⁷

11 If^a thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain;

12 If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that "pondereth the heart consider it?" and he "that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it?" and shall not he render to every man according to his works?

13 My son, eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honey-comb, which is sweet to thy taste.⁸

14 So^a shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul: when thou hast found it, then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.

15 Lay^a not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; spoil not his resting-place:

16 For^a a just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again: but the wicked shall fall into mischief.

17 Rejoice^a not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth;

18 Lest the LORD see it, and it displease him,⁹ and he turn away his wrath from him.¹

19 "Fret^a not thyself because of evil men, neither be thou envious at the wicked:

20 For^a there shall be no reward to the evil man; the candle^a of the wicked shall be put out.

21 My son, fear thou the LORD and the king; and meddle not with them^a that are given to change:⁵

22 For^a their calamity shall rise suddenly; and who knoweth the ruin of them both?

23 These^a things also belong to the wise. It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment.

24 He^a that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous; him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him:

25 But^a to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and a good blessing^a shall come upon them.

26 Every^a man shall kiss his lips that giveth a right answer.⁷

27 Prepare^a thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field; and afterwards build thine house.⁸

28 Be^a not a witness against thy neighbour without cause; and deceive not with thy lips.

29 Say^a not, I will do so to him as he hath done to me; I will render to the man according to his work.

30 I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding;

31 And, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone-wall thereof was broken down.

32 Then I saw, and considered^a it well; I looked upon it, and received instruction.

33 Yet^a a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep:

34 So^a shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth; and thy want as an armed man.¹

r In Palestine harvest begins in April, and is all gathered in by the middle of July. This is the hottest season of the year; and as from the middle of May onwards there is no rain, and the sky is entirely cloudless, cool drinks are most refreshing to the weary labourers. deliberate thought and sufficient preparation. 28. Never rashly or groundlessly affirm or insinuate anything to the hurt of thy neighbour's character: and never entice any one to believe or say ill of him. 29. Never, either in heart, word, or deed, revenge the injuries done to thee. 30-34. And from the misery and want which others have brought upon themselves, by their negligence, sloth, or mispending of time, learn earnestly to avoid these things, as ruinous to thy outward estate, as well as to the spiritual and eternal happiness of thy soul.

Ver. 14. The knowledge of wisdom—the knowledge of Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God, revealed to Old Testament saints in prophecies and types, not so clearly to the Jewish, but yet as certainly, as to the Christian church. C.

Ver. 16. A just man falleth seven times, &c. He falleth six times into trouble, sorrow, disappointments, and various calamities in worldly labours and affairs, arising sometimes from his own mistake or oversights, sometimes from others: a seventh time into religious afflictions (for such is the ordinary import of the seventh, as derived from the Sabbath), and these fallings may include mental anguish for himself, his friends, yea, his enemies, or the church—or they may include persecutions for the sake of truth and righteousness. Still he shall rise again, being helped of God, who will graciously perfect strength in his creature's weakness. C.

Ver. 26. Either he that giveth a right answer to a judge, whereby truth and justice are settled; or a right answer to an inquirer, whereby knowledge is extended; or a right answer to a caviller and false accuser, whereby iniquity is exposed, and innocence and right protected. C.

Ver. 30-32. I went by the field of the slothful . . . and received instruction. There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves, Job 34:22. Do as they may, they are detected even by the eye of man. Thorns, nettles, and broken walls whisper the story of their owner's indolence, and point out the invisible spectre, poverty, as he advances in the guise of a hungry traveller, and discover the gleaming of those resistless arms with which he will soon destroy his thoughtless and self-devoted victim. C.

CHAPTER XXV. Ver. 2. It is the glory of God that his counsels are unfathomable, and his works, either of creation and providence, so mysterious, that the wisest on earth cannot comprehend their nature, reason, or ends: but it is the honour of kings diligently to search the Scriptures, thoroughly to examine intricate causes, and dive into plots and conspiracies, or fully to display the reasons of their actions. 3. But vulgar minds can no more judge of the secret reasons of statesmen, than they can perfectly search and measure the heavens and the earth. 4, 5. As silver, when purified from its dross, may be framed into whatever vessels the founder pleases; so kingdoms may be established in the most virtuous and happy forms, when wicked persons are removed from the counsels and company of kings. 6, 7. Never ambitiously affect or thrust thyself into courts, or any places or stations that belong not to thee; for it will be more honourable and satisfying to be invited to them, than to be disgracefully thrust from the honours which thou hast arrogated to thyself, and that in the presence of the prince unto whom thou hast approached too near. 8-10. Never enter into any contention till thou hast well considered the goodness and weight of thy cause, and how to manage it, lest in the issue thou be plunged into perplexity and covered with shame. And, if it be possible, make up matters privately, even where thy cause is good. And never let anger or hatred provoke thee to discover thy neighbour's secrets in order to disgrace him, lest such as hear of it not only reproach thee for thy perfidiousness, but even retort upon thee such shameful conduct, which will render thee infamous through life. 11, 12. A wise instruction, advice, reproof, or word of comfort, seasonably and properly given, is comely, valuable, and ornamental: and scarcely can anything be more ornamental in life than a ready and humble hearkening and submitting to wise and seasonable reproof. 13. Cold drink or air in harvest is not more grateful and refreshing to the reapers, than good servants or ambassadors are to their masters, by their speedy despatch of the important business committed to them, and faithful report of their success. 14. It is extremely empty and deceiving to boast of graces, virtues, or abilities which we have not, or to promise what we cannot or care not to perform. 15. By patient submission and expectation princes are most readily pacified and persuaded: and humble, soft, and affectionate language bows the most stiff and hardened tempers, and overcomes even stubborn resolutions to the contrary. 16. Created comforts and pleasures are very agreeable if used in due moderation; but otherwise they lose their relish and plunge us into guilt and trouble. 17. To maintain a friendly intercourse with our neighbours is dutiful and pleasant; but too many, too long, or unreasonable visits render us disagreeable and disliked. 18. Slander and a bearing false witness are most dangerous and murderous means of destroying our neighbour. 19. Confidence in an unfaithful person in the time of trouble will, to our great anguish and grief, entirely disappoint us of help or relief. 20. As taking away clothes in winter increases our sense of cold, and vinegar irritates nitre, so unseasonable mirth renders a sad heart still more sorrowful. 21, 22. In time of need always render good for evil; and kindly bestow necessary supplies on such as have injured thee: thus shalt thou soften their rage, slay their hatred, and gain their affections; and the Lord shall reward thee with blessings, while he fearfully punishes them if they continue obstinate. 23. As the north wind in many countries dispels clouds and prevents rain, so frowns and rebukes check reproachful slandering and lying. 24. It is better to live cooped up in a corner, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, than in a large family and stately palace with a contentious, brawling, and scolding wife. 25. Good and certain news from a far country, where our friends and fortunes are, is expected with impatience, heard with delight, and believed and thought on with refreshing pleasure; but especially the gospel, which brings from God the blessed tidings of pardon, peace, grace, and 16 The^e sluggard is wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason.

17 He^e that passeth by, and meddleth with strife ¹⁸belonging not to him, ¹⁹is like one that taketh a dog by the ears.⁶

18 As a mad man who casteth ¹⁹firebrands, arrows, and death,

19 So^a is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, Am not I in sport?

20 Where⁸ no wood is, ²¹there the fire goeth out; so ²²where there is no tale-bearer,⁹ the strife ceaseth.¹

21 As^a coals are to burning coals, and wood to fire; so ²²is a contentious man to kindle strife.

22 The^g words of a tale-bearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts² of the belly.

23 Burning^a lips,³ and a wicked heart, ²⁴are like a potsherd covered with silver dross.

24 He that hateth dissembleth⁴ with his lips, and layeth up deceit within him:

25 When^a he speaketh fair,⁵ believe him not; for ²⁶there are seven abominations⁶ in his heart.

26 Whose⁷ hatred^b is covered by deceit, his wickedness shall be showed before the ²⁷whole congregation.⁸

salvation. 26. When righteous men are decoyed into scandalous sins, or are degraded from their influence and authority, and oppressed and persecuted, it is as hurtful to a church or nation as if the public fountains were corrupted and poisoned. 27. To hunt after worldly applause and honours, however sweet they be to corrupt nature, is extremely disgraceful and dangerous. 28. And to be furious and passionate renders us useless and miserable.

Ver. 1. Men of Hezekiah. Who the 'men of Hezekiah' were is unknown; and in such cases conjecture is useless. Nor would the knowledge be of any value, for the object of the record is not to give authority to these proverbs, but to remind the wise men of one generation to preserve and copy out for circulation the wisdom of a foregoing generation.—Note. It is thus God has given grace to the Protestant churches to multiply and circulate so many millions of copies of the Holy Scriptures in almost all languages of the earth. C.

Ver. 9. In perfect accordance with that precept of our Saviour, 'If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone,' Mat. 18. 15.—Every confidential secret implies a trust; and he that reveals it, even to his most intimate friend, thereby teaches that friend to divulge it to another, and is thus most likely to be brought to shame as an idle babbler or unfaithful steward. C.

Ver. 11. Holden and others interpret the passage of oranges, citrons, and such golden or precious fruit, produced at feasts in baskets of silver network. But as it contains no mention of taste, the reference seems rather to be to figures of fruit of gold, interspersed amongst branches and leaves of silver, according to the gorgeous style of eastern palaces. C.

Ver. 12. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest. The snow of the lofty Hermon supplied, throughout the heat of summer and toil of harvest, snow for cooling either wine or water—the most reviving of all cordials under a burning sun. C.

Ver. 17. No wise man can be much in his neighbour's house; for any man will find useful employment in his own. And he that imposes himself upon others, because he is weary of himself or of his duty, will soon become a weariness and a nuisance to others. C.

Ver. 20. As vinegar upon nitre. Vinegar poured on the nitre of the ancients (carbonate of soda) causes an instant ebullition in the form of tears. And so does the ill-timed mirth of the fool wring new sorrows from the heavy heart. C.

Ver. 22. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, &c. And so extract love from his angry heart, and purify him from his enmity, as 'coals of fire' extract metals from the hard rock, and clear away the dross with which they are commingled. 'The Lord shall reward thee' with thine enemy's conversion, or the peace of thine own conscience. C.

Ver. 26. A righteous man, tempted by fear or hope, to flatter and become subservient to the wicked, is sure to trouble his own peace of mind, if not finally to corrupt his principles. Peter trembling before a servant maid, and accommodating his speech to a rude and blasphemous soldiery, is a striking exemplification of this proverb. C.

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 1. Dignity and authority are very ill placed in the hands of foolish and wicked men, who know not how to use them, but will do mischief to themselves and others by them. 2. Causeless curses and imprecations can hurt the innocent no more than the birds that fly over their heads. 3. Obstinate, stupid, and refractory sinners, like beasts, must, by sharp punishments, be restrained from evil, and excited to good. 4. Answer not an ignorant and impertinent fool in his own brawling and reproachful manner, so as to imitate his impertinence. 5. Answer a proud conceited fool with such strength and evidence of reason as may render him sensible of his folly, and check his pride. 6. He who employs fools or rakes in any important business, deprives himself of the advantage he might have expected, and brings much inconvenience and mischief upon himself. 7. As dancing or walking by a lame man would but manifest his lameness, so the pretences of fools to wisdom do but render them the more ridiculous. 8. Honour bestowed upon fools is very unstable and useless, if not mischievous. 9. Grave, holy, and wise sayings upbraid fools for their impertinence and wickedness, however insensible they may be of the sharpest rebukes. 10. God, and even wise princes, punish sins of ignorance and wilful wickedness in a wise, just, and suitable manner. 11. Foolish sinners quickly, and often shamelessly, return to the very sins for which they have been sharply punished, and of which they have before repented, as grievous and hurtful. 12. There is more hope of the amendment of a sottish man, than of one who is so wise and virtuous in his own conceit that he thinks himself above instruction. 13. They who have no mind to labour, never want pretences for their idleness; and their sluggish fancy represents to them the most improbable and insuperable difficulties. 14. It is almost a toil for such to turn themselves on their bed; and though they seem busy, they do nothing to the purpose. Though they move in the formal round of external duties, they are never a whit nearer to heaven. 15. Pretending cold, or inability, they can scarcely apply to any work; and it is almost a burden for them to take their meat. 16. But though they take no pains to acquire knowledge, they look upon themselves as perfect miracles in wisdom, and treat with absolute contempt every argument that can be used to convince them of their mistakes and danger. 17. It is extremely dangerous to engage in other men's quarrels and disputes, which do not belong to us. 18, 19. To wrong our neighbours, by either word or deed, and then pretend that it was in jest, discovers us to be stupidly insolent and diabolically mad. 20. A proper discouragement of tale-bearers, whisperers, and slanderers, is an effectual mean to prevent contentions, or even to extinguish such as are begun. 21. It is also necessary to avoid contentious persons, who, by their provoking language, kindle up or inflame quarrels, even as one inflamed coal or piece of wood kindles another. 22. The wounds given to men's characters, business, and spirits, by calumnies slyly and secretly spread, are extremely painful and hurtful, and sometimes will scarcely admit of a cure. 23. Malicious and angry language corresponds very well with an envious and wicked heart; and notwithstanding their fine show, scarcely anything is more detestable than affectionate words when used to cover hatred and enmity of heart; nor will the dissimulation pass long undetected. 24-26. Nothing is more common in the world than dissembled professions of regard and affection; and yet nothing more base, and in the end more hurtful and ignominious, to the user. 27. They who labour to destroy their neighbours, whether by fraud or violence, involve themselves in the very mischiefs which they had intended for others. 28. Liars and slanderers chiefly hate those whom they have slandered, fearing that they may avenge themselves; and also those who confute their slanders. And flatcrers ruin men by drawing them into proud, rash, and pernicious courses.

Ver. 2. As wandering will never bring the bird home, and as flying will never bring the swallow to rest, so the course without a cause will never light upon the head of the innocent object of the curser's enmity. C.

Ver. 10. If there be one practical advice more important than another, it is this: 'Never speak a word but in truth—be always in earnest.' A loose jest may 'set the table in a roar'; no harm may be meant; but no good is intended: it is therefore sin. And as a firebrand, thrown at random, may destroy a splendid palace, so may a thoughtless 'jest' ruin a fair reputation.—Note. Children, look to a God of truth—speak words of truth—never jest at the expense of truth—be always in earnest. C.

Ver. 23. Silver dross is ordinarily lead, with which the cheapest kinds of earthenware are covered by the potter while immersed in a burning furnace. 'Burning lips' are not 'lips breathing warmth of affection,' but 'words that burn' up reputations (see ver. 24), and which are often covered over, and even ornamented as with 'silver dross.' Yet as a 'potsherd' shall they be dashed to pieces, when men 'by their words shall be justified, and by their words shall be condemned.' C.

CHAPTER XXVII. Ver. 1. Never boast what thou wilt be, or do, in any future period; for thou knowest not what changes Providence may make in a very short time. 2. Never commend thy own excellencies or works; but leave that to others who cannot be suspected of partiality. 3. 4. The anger, cruelty, and rage of foolish men are very intolerable, crushing, and hard to be appeased; but an envious desire of revenge is still more dangerous, as it lies hid, increases daily, and is more and more exasperated, till it find opportunity to vent itself in the intended mischief. 5. To tell men plainly of their faults, and rebuke them freely when need requires, is a more valuable piece of friendship than the strongest inward affection. 6. Just and reasonable reproofs, however severe, ought to be cheerfully received when they proceed from true love and faithful regard: but the most tender and abundant expressions of kindness from an enemy ought to be suspected as false and treacherous. 7. Rich men are apt to be unsatisfied with, or even to nauseate, the most delicious enjoyments: but poverty disposes men to a ready and thankful reception of the smallest blessings, though mixed with care and labour. 8. When men, by levity or discontent, change their country, trade, or office in which Providence had placed them, they ordinarily expose themselves to manifold dangers and inconveniences, but rarely mend their condition. 9. The kind conversation and prudent counsels of affectionate friends are extremely refreshing and comfortable. 10. Nay, such friends are more to be depended on in a time of distress than our nearest relations. 11. My son, improve these instructions to make thee truly wise and good; which will at once comfort my heart, and enable me to refute such as charge me with want of due care about my children. 12. Prudent men foresee the approach of calamities, and take proper methods to avoid them; but inconsiderate persons, deceived by others, securely rush forward till they are ruined. 13. Never trust, without a sufficient pledge, a man that is so foolish and rash as to be surety for persons whom he knows not, and even for harlots. 14. Extravagant and flattering commendations of a friend or benefactor are rather a disparagement than an honour, as it is a shame to have connection with such silly sycophants. 15. A contentious and brawling woman is a continued plague and a destructive ruin to her husband, family, and estate. 16. For it is quite impossible to conceal her infamous bawling humour, or to make her hold her tongue. 17. By mutual conversation friends quicken the wit, enliven the affection, strengthen the judgment, and animate the activity of one another. 18. Such servants as faithfully defend their master's person and reputation, and labour to preserve and promote his wealth, ought to be rewarded by him, and shall be honoured of God and men. 19. There is a surprising likeness in the tempers and dispositions of men, both among saints and sinners; and most are inclined to carry themselves towards others as they do towards them. And they who are remarkably sagacious can penetrate far into the inclinations and designs of others. 20. It is impossible to satisfy the corrupt desires of men: the more they are indulged the more they crave; and nothing but the fulness of God can satisfy the desires of an immortal soul. 21. Nothing more effectually tries a man than high commendations. If he be light, vain, frothy, and easily puffed up by them, it discovers his emptiness: but if under them he be humble, modest, and sensible of his own defects, it manifests him truly valuable. 22. Some are so hardened and stupified in their sinful courses, that no reproofs or corrections can make them a whit better. 23-27. Masters should look after the management of their worldly affairs themselves, and not leave all to servants; for without due care and diligence, the richest estates will soon come to nought: whereas by a proper care of the hay, grass, herbs, and flocks which Providence bestows, they may enjoy a most comfortable livelihood for themselves and families.

Ver. 16. Eastern women may be literally called hidden, whether in the tent in the desert, or the harem in the city. But the unsanctified contentious woman, who has not received of the Lord that ornament of a 'meek and quiet spirit,' which is in the sight of God of great price, 1 Pe. 3. 4, can no more have her folly hid than the wind can be restrained from blowing, or ointment on the hand from betraying its presence by its odour. C.

Ver. 22. The pestle and mortar were used for separating grain from the husk long subsequent to the introduction of mills; and in some European countries are still used for the formation of a substitute for what, in Britain, is called 'pearl-barley.' The image admirably illustrates the inseparability of folly from a fool. C.

CHAPTER XXVIII. Ver. 1. Guilt makes men cowards but conscious integrity makes men courageous, and proceed with undaunted resolution in the most hazardous undertakings. 2. To punish the wickedness of nations, God permits them to fall into factions or murder their sovereigns; but a prince of remarkable piety for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the maintenance⁴ for thy maidens.

General observations of impiety and religious integrity.

5 The greater part of Palestine was cultivated in terraces.

With immense care and skill the terraces were constructed along glen, bank, and mountain side, from base to summit. Gentle rain watered the thirsty soil, and made it productive. But a sweeping torrent,

such as at long inter-country, washes the soil off the terraces, breaks down the vast tracts bare and desolate.—P.

and prudence is extremely useful for settling or preserving a state. 3. A needy man placed in power, and squeezing from the poor that little which they have, is a most ruinous scourge to a nation. 4. Apostates from the ways of God are the most forward in encouraging men in wickedness, and commending them for it: but they who resolutely observe God's law, do what they can to reform or punish them. 5. Unregenerate men have no solid or experimental knowledge of what is right or wrong: but they who study God's Word, and depend on his instructions, understand whatever is necessary to salvation. 6. A poor man, who acts honestly and uprightly in all he does, is far happier, and more useful and commendable, than a rich pretender to virtue, who obstinately and craftily practises vice. 7. He is an honour to his parents, as well as to himself, who studies the law of God, and observes the rules of piety and sobriety there prescribed: but he that associates himself with rakes, drunkards, and gluttons, and spends his time and money in sensual pleasures, is a shame and vexation to them. 8. God often translates the wealth, gotten by covetousness and oppression, from the gatherers into the hands of such as are merciful and benevolent. 9. The very prayers and other religious services of them who obstinately live in their sins are, in God's view, an abominable and hypocritical prostitution of his ordinances, since it appears as if they thus intended to make him a partner in their wickedness. 10. They who by their persuasion, example, or cunning contrivances seduce upright men into sinful and dangerous practices, shall themselves irrecoverably fall into that very mischief which they intended for others: but they who live in simplicity and godly sincerity shall enjoy the blessings of grace here and of glory hereafter. 11. Rich men, being courted and complimented by every one, are apt to imagine themselves extremely wise: but sensible and religious persons, however poor, quickly discern their emptiness and ignorance. 12. It is an honour and happiness for a nation when pious and prudent men are advanced to places of power and trust: but when the wicked are exalted, the persons, lives, and estates, especially of good men, are in danger, and they are obliged to conceal them. 13. He that conceals, extenuates, or defends his sins, exposes himself to severe punishments: but he who through faith in Christ confesses and forsakes them, shall be graciously blessed by God and honoured by men. 14. Happy is he who lives under the constant awe of God's perfections, and under a jealousy of his own evil heart and a fear to do evil: but he that obstinately and presumptuously goes on in his sinful courses shall irrecoverably and eternally perish. 15. How cruel and terrible a plague is a tyrannical ruler! His subjects, unable to resist, are harassed by oppression, and terrified with fears of still greater evils.—17. Murderers shall never be able to escape the judgment of God; but shall *hurry them-*selves into sudden and irremediable destruction, without any one to help or pity them. 18. Real godliness, strict honesty and integrity, are the sure road to safety, honour, and happiness: but fraudulent sinners, obstinate in their wickedness, shall quickly involve themselves in the depths of misery. 19, 20. They who believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and candour in their dealings, shall have abundant blessings from God and honours from men: but they who hasten to be rich, render themselves execrable by their base and fraudulent methods. 21. When judges have accustomed themselves to respect persons in judgment, the most insignificant bribe will make them disregard both law and equity, and favour an unrighteous cause. 22. He that hastens to be rich envies everybody who has more than himself, covets whatever he sees, and grudges to part with the most necessary expense or alms; and never seriously thinks how quickly God may take him from his wealth, or it become a curse to him, so that through his money he corrupts himself. 23. They who in an honest and friendly manner reprove a man for his faults, will afterwards have much more of his favour and regard than they who flatter him in his sins. 24. They who snatch all that they can from their parents are as bad as common robbers, and are in a fair way to associate themselves with such. 25. A man of a proud, insolent, and ambitious spirit involves himself in perpetual quarrels, and has no satisfaction in what he enjoys; nay, many times wastes his estate in contentions: but he who, trusting in the Lord to redress his grievances, patiently bears injuries, lives comfortably and happy. 26. Nothing is more foolish than to rely wholly on our own wisdom and ability, or to trust in our own heart, which is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: but he who walks according to the counsels of wise men, and the directions of God, shall escape, or be delivered out of, manifold dangers and troubles. 27. He who kindly and cheerfully relieves such as are in want shall 27 He^a that giveth unto the poor shall not lack: but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse.

28 When^r the wicked rise, men hide themselves: but when they perish, the righteous increase.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 Observations of public government, 15 and of private. 22 Of anger, pride, thievery, cowardice, and corruption.

HE^a that, being often reproved,¹ hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

2 When^b the righteous are in authority,² the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn.

3 Whoso^c loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: but^d he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

4 The^e king by judgment establisheth the land: but he that receiveth gifts³ overthroweth it.

5 A^f man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

6 In^h the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.⁴

7 The^e righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

8 Scornful^k men bring⁵ a city into a snare:⁶ but wise men turn away wrath.

thereby increase his own estate: but he that avoids taking notice of their miseries draws upon himself the curse of God and of men. 28. When wicked men are increased in number, and advanced in authority, good men are obliged to hide themselves from their tyranny and persecution: but when God casts down the wicked, the righteous take courage, and openly show themselves; and their numbers are increased under pious and prudent governors.

Ver. 5. They that seek the Lord understand all things. They know more about all things, than worldly men know about any one thing: for they 'know that all things work together for good to them that love God.' C.

Ver. 7. Shame his father. Shames him for neglecting his education—for not restraining him in time—or, notwithstanding all his care, breaks his heart by his incorrigible follies. C.

Ver. 11. It is the special duty of the rich to give their children a good education, both in secular and religious knowledge: for if the well-educated poor once discover any inferiority in the rich, contempt for their ignorance, and the disorganization of society, is sure to follow.—Note. A true religious education can alone teach the rich kindness and the poor gratitude. C.

Ver. 17. The murderer shall flee in terror of conscience till the grave receives him: let no man stay him in this flight by hiding him from deserved justice, Ge. 9. 6. C.

Ver. 22. An evil eye never means, as the ignorant and superstitious imagine, an eye that can inflict evil according to the malignity of its owner; but an eye that cannot see aright, because of some obstruction in its organization. In this verse, temporal riches form the obstruction that will not permit the hastener to see things that are 'not seen and eternal,' 2Co. 4. 18. C.

CHAPTER XXIX. Ver. 2, 4. Where justice is impartially executed, and liberty and property secured, the nation grows great and happy; but bribery and oppressive taxes ruin a state. 5. Flatterers artfully draw men into wickedness and ruin. 6. In the wicked course of sinners, one sin draws on another and its attendant plagues; but the godly, by walking in Christ, obtain solid and lasting joy and comfort.—8. Obstinate sinners and scornful men, by laughing at all things serious, sacred, or civil, throw nations and cities into the most ruinous disorder; but pious and prudent rulers, by their prayers and piety, avert the deserved judgment of God, and by their wise conduct divert the fury of men. 9. It is to no purpose to spend reasonings or reproofs upon incorrigible fools; for in whatever manner they appear to take them, they will still persist in their folly and wickedness. 10. Blood-thirsty men direct their murderous malice especially against godly magistrates or other valuable persons; but such as are truly virtuous labour to defend and promote the welfare of such. 11. Fools inconsiderately speak out whatever comes into their head; but wise men think well before they speak, and only utter what they know and as the opportunity requires. 12. If a ruler hearken to lies, flatteries, or false accusations, his whole court will quickly become so wicked, that it will be hard to find an honest man in office.

13. Poor men who want estates, and rich men who get or increase their estates by fraud, are connected together in this world, and the Lord, without distinction, allows to both his light of nature, or revelation, and blessings of providence, as is good in his sight. 14. Kings who faithfully administer justice to their subjects, and set themselves to protect and help the poor, take the most proper course to gain their subjects' affection, and to continue their kingdom to many generations.

15. Careful instructions and reproofs, and prudent corrections, are of great use to render children wise, prudent, and pious: but children left to follow their own inclinations prove a disgrace and plague to parents, particularly to their indulgent mothers.

16. When wicked men are increased in number and advanced in dignity, presumptuous wickedness abounds more and more: but the righteous ought not to be discouraged, as they shall quickly see their downfall.

17. Children carefully brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, bid fair to be a help and comfort to their parents. 18. Where men want the oracles of God and ordinances of the gospel, they cannot but live wickedly on earth and be miserable in eternity: but great is the present and future happiness of such as, renewed by his grace, strictly observe his laws.

19. No persuasion, reproofs, or threatenings will avail with some refractory and slavish-minded servants; nothing but blows will make them regard what is said or attend to their duty. 20. It is more easy to instruct and reform the most weak and ignorant, than to rectify what is amiss in a rash, heady, and self-conceited manager of his affairs.

21. If servants, who continue long in a family, be too much indulged or favoured, they are apt to behave with as much boldness and freedom as if they were children; or even to domineer over them, and labour to disinherit them.

22. Passionate persons are apt to quarrel and contend about trifles, and to fall into a multitude of sins, in word or deed, both against God and men. 23. Proud, saucy, and ambitious behaviour renders men contemned, hated, and miserable; but meekness and humility procure useful and lasting honours. 24. Partnership with thieves or fraudulent persons, endangers both soul and body, and is apt to involve men in perjury. 25. An immoderate fear of men ensnares us into much guilt and mischief: but he that puts his whole confidence in God shall be preserved from them. 26. Multitudes court the favour of princes and other great men: but it is God alone who determines the lots of men here and hereafter. 27. There is a stated antipathy between the righteous and wicked; their natures, tempers, counsels, and ends being the very reverse of each other.

Ver. 1. Hardeneth himself by seeking excuses or palliations for his sin; or even false interpretations and doctrines to defend his evil courses. He 'shall fall without remedy,' as the carcasses of the unbelievers fell in the wilderness, to whom God swore in his wrath, they should not enter into his rest. He. 3. 11. C.

Ver. 4. He that receiveth gifts. According to the margin, 'a man of oblations.' The true meaning seems to be: a king who supports justice and equity in the fear of God, establishes his kingdom; but he who substitutes for these 'weightier matters of the law,' mere 'legal oblations,' ceremonial observances, overthrows it. This was literally exemplified and fulfilled by the rulers of the Jews in the days of our Lord. See Mat. 23. 23, 38. C.

Ver. 12. The ruler that 'hearkens to lies,' is either he that will bear nothing but flattery, or he that will credulously receive false accusations, and will indolently neglect to judge for himself. All his servants will soon be wicked: for godly men will fly from him; and wicked men will gather around him, as vultures to the carcass of the dead. C.

Ver. 13. The deceitful man, who overreached him, oppressed him, and made him poor.—The Lord lighteneth both their eyes. The enriched to see, if he would, better riches than he has gained; the poor, to seek better than he has lost. C.

Ver. 19. Even 'a servant' will not be corrected by (mere hasty) words, see ver. 20: example, authority, and religious principle must all be brought to bear upon him. C.

Ver. 24. That the Jewish judges adjudged the accused is evident from the case of our Lord, Mat. 26. 62-64. The verse accordingly means, that the 'partner' (the accomplice) of the thief hears such an adjuration; yet, bound by a false and diabolical principle, misnamed honour, 'bewrayeth not the matter,' and is thereby guilty of perjury, to the ruin of his soul. C.

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 1. Of Lemuel nothing more is known than what is here recorded: and where there is nothing certain, conjecture is of no service. The word signifies 'God with them,' and if rulers did but know and always feel by whom, and for whom, and to whom they reign, it would ever be the best description of that high office to which 'the powers that be are ordained of God.' Ver. 26. This passage is a beautiful description of a good wife, given of the Lord; but its real excellency lies in being an emblem of the church, opening 'her mouth with wisdom,' and knowing nothing by her ministers but 'Jesus Christ and him crucified.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—What blessings might mothers be to families, churches, and nations, would they but carefully educate their children! And it is unnatural and irreligious when they do otherwise. When princes are given to whoredom and drunkenness, and regardless of the poor or of the exact administration of justice, they are but a plague to the nation which they govern. With great care and circumspection ought all, especially such as bear rule in church or state, to make choice of their yokefellows in marriage. And it is a great blessing to themselves, and all their connections, if Providence direct them aright. But it is absurd and ruinous when wealth, beauty, or parentage are preferred to real virtue and religion, in the choice of wives or husbands. What a scandal to human nature is it when wives become the plague, the reproach of families! or when such as are virtuous and prudent are abused by husbands, unfaithful, drunken, imperious, cruel, outrageous, or churlish!—But infinite is the mercy that God, by his grace, has formed all who accept Christ into a living church, which, as the spouse of his Son, are made to answer this amiable and glorious description.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

Solomon, we are told (1 Ki. 4. 32), composed no less than three thousand proverbs. As we count them, in modern verses, this collection does not contain so many. The conclusion therefore is, that many have been allowed to pass into oblivion, and that we possess but a part. If it be so, this is in no way to be wondered at in the case of Solomon, since we are told (John 20. 30) that, even in the case of 'a greater than Solomon,' many other miracles are stated to have been wrought, which were not specifically recorded by the evangelist. Next to the book of Psalms, the Proverbs of Solomon are most frequently quoted in the New Testament; and that, be it well observed, not merely as a treasury of moral precepts, but as a direct revelation of JESUS as the wisdom of God and the power of God.

If considered merely as a collection of moral precepts for the regulation of fathers, mothers, children, and servants in families—or of kings, magistrates, and subjects in states—it contains more true practical wisdom than all the philosophers of Greece, Rome, and more modern times, have ever been able to produce. Nor can there be any question that the ancient and most distinguished philosophers of Greece borrowed the principles of their moral doctrines from these proverbs; and have, in two respects, surpassed the modern deistical moralists; first, in the superiority of their moral code; and, secondly, in the honesty wherewith they acknowledged the source from which they were borrowed.

The book of Proverbs seems naturally divisible into five parts:—1. The first nine chapters containing various instructions and excitements to the study of the true wisdom—the knowledge of JESUS CHRIST, 'the wisdom of God, and the power of God.' 2. From x.–xxii. 16, which contains what is properly called the Proverbs. 3. From xxii. 17–xxv. inclusive, containing paternal instructions, speaking as unto children. 4. Extends from xxv.–xxx. inclusive, consisting of detached moral precepts, and is distinguished by having been 'copied out' by 'the men of Hezekiah.' 5. Includes xxx. xxxi.: the former containing the prayer and instructions of Agur to Ithiel and Ugal: the other addressed to Lemuel by his mother.

The whole, if considered as a mere literary and philosophical monument of the Hebrews, in the days of their prosperity, would place them as far above 'Greek and Roman glory,' as the sun, in his brightness, is above a flickering and 'sickly taper;' while, independent of all external evidences, the height, the depth, and immaculate purity of their morals, present an internal illustration of their divine origin, which no candid mind can possibly resist.—C.

THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

To warn others, Solomon here (1) Represents the vanity and vexation which adhere to all created enjoyments; particularly to those in which men ordinarily look for happiness; as human learning and policy, sensual delights, honour, power, and riches, or an empty profession of religion, ch. i.-vi. (2) Prescribes remedies against that vanity and vexation which attend those things; viz. sitting loose to them; enjoying them moderately, but never expecting much from them; acquiescing in the will of God concerning us in every event; remembering God in the days of our youth; and continuing all our life in his fear and service, with an eye to the future judgment, ch. vii.-xii. But in both parts the demonstrations of the vanity of things, and the prescriptions of remedies, are somewhat mixed.

[This book has been frequently represented as 'Solomon's penitential discourse, composed a little before his death; in which he recants and laments' his follies and departures from God. From whom, or at what time, this opinion originated in the Christian church, we are unable to say: nor is it of any importance to ascertain its origin. To say the least of it, it is altogether unsupported by any scriptural authority! It is also unsupported by any traditional Jewish authority. For the Talmudical writers ascribe the book, not to Solomon, but to Hezekiah; Kimchi, to the prophet Isaiah; while Grotius considers it to have been composed by order of Zerubbabel. Jahn refers it to a period posterior to the Babylonish captivity, and Zirkel to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; and Jerome informs us, that, on account of some imaginary contradictions, the Jews, after the captivity, were averse to receiving it into the canon of Scripture, till more mature consideration convinced them of their error. That Solomon was the author, is apparent from internal evidence; especially from ch. 1. 12, 16; 2. 4, 6; 12. 9, 10. Of the Christian reader we ask specially that, when entering upon the study of it, he would lay aside all preconceived and unauthorized opinions about the date and object of the book, and come to examine it in a prayerful and teachable spirit. And this matter is more peculiarly necessary than may at first sight appear: for as he that views a landscape through a coloured glass, sees every object tinged with some colour that belongs not to the object, but to the glass; so he that commences the study of this book, under the impression that it is a record of Solomon's personal experience, retraction, and penitence—nay more, a kind of death-bed renunciation of the follies by which his wisdom had been stained—comes with a principle of interpretation that he brings to no other book; that is, an unauthorized determination about what the writer must intend, and not a simple inquiry into the meaning of what he actually says.

In humbly entering upon the interpretation of this book, we therefore cast away every opinion, however current and however supported, about the date and object of this book; and, by the grace of God, seek to ascertain the mind of the Spirit as revealed in its contents. C.]

1 The Preacher sheweth that all human courses are vain: 4 because the creatures are restless in their courses, 9 they bring forth nothing new, and all old things are forgotten, 12 and because he hath found it to be so in the studies of wisdom.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Vanity—a vapour, emptiness, an object destitute of real good, a statement destitute of truth—an idol, because destitute of that life and power which its ignorant worshippers ascribe to it. C.

Ver. 4. For ever. This earth abideth through 'all generations,' and 'we, according to God's promise, look for new heavens and a new earth,' 2 Pe. 3. 13, so that the earth literally 'abideth for ever.' C.

Ver. 9. There is no new thing under the sun. There is nothing new in nature, in moral principles, in sciences, or in arts. New discoveries are but the adoption of principles already in full operation in nature, or the revival of things forgotten. New combinations and applications, however, of old principles there may be, and this is the utmost novelty that human ingenuity may claim. C.

Ver. 13. I gave my heart to seek, &c. Not by vain philosophy, falsely called wisdom; but by that which begins in the 'fear of the Lord,' and embraces all that is revealed of the 'manifold wisdom of God' in Jesus Christ, Ps. 111. 10; Ep. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 15. A world where everything crooked, inconvenient, annoying, adverse, could be made straight—and where everything wanting in wishes, desires, accomplishments, possessions, could be obtained—would not be suited to the present fallen state of man. God has therefore in mercy, while he inflicted the curse, suited this 'sore travail' as a check to the natural and a discipline to the renewed man. C.

Ver. 17. Madness—sometimes applied to great and unreasonable anger; more frequently to persons who understand and can discourse well upon all subjects but one. And such ever is the mere intellectual and moral man, wise upon all subjects but one, the knowledge of God in Christ, 1 Co. 1. 18-24; 2 Co. 5. 19, 20. C.

Ver. 18. The reason of this is that human wisdom can only demonstrate the vanity of all earthly things. It proves that pleasure is short-lived, that fame soon passes away, that wealth cannot prolong life, that no source of human enjoyment is or can be lasting. The more man knows of these things—the more he reflects upon them, if he have no higher source of happiness, the more miserable must he become. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How feelingly a true penitent, from his own experience, preaches that vanity and vexation which attend created enjoyments! All things indeed in nature concur to manifest this humbling truth, though it is very hard to convince most men of it: for, notwithstanding the perpetual flux, returns, and obli-vion with which created things are marked, we are too apt to be resting in them. Neither our own observation nor experience, nor the dictates of the Spirit of ing, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten "more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem; yea, my heart had great⁹ experience⁹ of wisdom and knowledge.

17 And^a I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.

18 For^a in much wisdom is much grief; and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.

CHAPTER II.

1 The vanity of human courses in the pursuits of pleasure. 12 Though the wise be better than the fool, yet both have one event. 18 The vanity of human labour, in leaving it they know not to whom. 24 Nothing better than joy in our labour; but that is God's gift to the good only.

I SAID^a in mine heart, Go to now, ^bI will prove thee with mirth; therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I^c said of laughter, It is mad; and of mirth, What doeth it?

3 I^d sought in mine heart ^eto give myself unto wine,² (yet ^f'acquainting mine heart with wisdom,) and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven all the days of their ^glife.⁴

4 I^h made me great works; I ⁱbuilted me houses; ^jI planted me vineyards:

5 I^k made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I^l made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

7 I^m got me servants and maidens, and had servants⁵ born in my house; ⁿalso I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

8 I^o gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces; ^pI gat me men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments,⁶ and that of all sorts.

9 So^q I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And^r whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy: for my heart rejoiced in all my labour; and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then^s I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do; and, behold, ^t'all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and ^u'there was no profit under the sun.

* This is no Epicurean assertion, insinuation, or objection, as some imagine. There is literally nothing better for a man than thus to eat, drink, and enjoy.
(1) There is nothing better for his health and strength of body.
(2) There is nothing better for his soul; for if he 'enjoy good' in his eating and drinking, both have been 'sanctified by the word and prayer,' 1 Ti. 4: 5; and both he has used to the 'glory of God,' doing 'all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ,' 1 Co. 10: 31. But are not immortality and glory better? Ro. 2: 7. Yes, yes, undoubtedly; but immortality

12 ¶ And ^aI turned myself to behold wisdom, and madness, and ^b'folly:⁸ for what can the man do that cometh after the king? even that which hath been already done.⁹

13 Then I saw ^c'that wisdom¹ excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

14 The^d wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also ^e'that one event² happeneth to them all.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me;³ and ^f'why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.⁴

16 For⁵ there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is, in the days to come shall all be forgotten: and ^g'how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore⁶ I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: ^h'for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated ⁱ'all my labour which I had taken⁵ under the sun; because ^j'I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me:

19 And who knoweth ^k'whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is also ^l'vanity.

20 Therefore I went about ^m'to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.⁶

21 For⁷ there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he leave⁷ it for his portion. This also is vanity, and a great evil.

22 For^a what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

23 For^b all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

24 ¶ There^c is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul⁸ enjoy good in his ^d'labour. This also I saw, that ^e'it was from the hand of God.

25 For^f who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For^g God giveth to a man that is good in his sight¹ wisdom, and knowledge, and joy:

God, are credited by us. Take heed, my soul, never more to esteem or desire them as God; never more depend on or delight in them as thy God. If, by all my labours for human knowledge, I can neither satisfy my mind, rectify my nature or lot, nor amend the world, let me study to know Christ and him crucified; thus shall I be changed into the same image from glory to glory. And let this knowledge, which is eternal life, be the chief object of my pursuit.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Enjoy pleasure. Not sinful pleasure, for then could not wisdom remain, see ver. 9; but the legitimate pleasures derived from useful labour, permitted improvements, and the social intercourse of well-ordered society. —C.

Ver. 3. To lay hold on folly. That childish pursuit of toys and amusements, to the rejection of more important objects and pursuits—and which must be seized and examined 'as it flies,' because ever changing in object and fashion. —C.

Ver. 8. The last clause some are disposed to translate 'wives and concubines,' a sense to which the words may be strained; but which the vanitas claimed in this inquiry, ver. 9, could by no means tolerate. —C.

Ver. 11. How is the joy of ver. 10 to be reconciled with the vexation of ver. 11? Simply thus: all this joy, so far as derived from all his labour, was, when examined by the light of wisdom, nothing but vanity, because it had no real profit; and nothing but vexation, because inseparably mingled with disappointments. —C.

Ver. 17. Therefore I hated life. But not with the hatred of a selfish misanthrope or exhausted sensualist, for where then had been wisdom? ver. 9; but with the hatred of a well-instructed and experienced believer, according to the word of our Lord, Lu. 14: 26; Jn. 12: 25. —C.

Ver. 23. And a merciful dispensation it is, though arising out of the curse; for the heart, when it findeth 'no rest in the night,' is thereby instructed to draw near to Jesus, who alone can give it rest, Mat. 11: 28. —C.

Ver. 25. The best Hebrew MSS. concur with the evident sense of the passage, in reading for 'more than I'—'without him,' that is, without God's gift. —C.

A GLIMPSE OF SOLOMON'S POOLS. [ECCLESIASTES, ii:6].—"I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees." There are three of these pools, and above them is a large building which we see in the picture, a sort of half castle and half tavern, which is said to be of Saracenic origin. To the west of this there is a spring, which, in connection with three others, supplies the pools with water. These pools are partly excavated in the rocky bed of the valley, and partly built of large stones. They are so arranged that the bottom of each pool is higher than the top of the one next below it. In this way it is possible to fill every pool with water. According to Josephus, there was a city near Bethlehem which had gardens and rivulets of water, to which Solomon was in the habit of taking a morning drive. These pools are about three miles southwest of Bethlehem.

but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather, and to heap up, that he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

CHAPTER III.

1 By the necessary change of times, vanity is added to human travail. 11 There is an excellency in God's works. 16 But as for man, God shall judge his works there, and here he shall be like a beast.

TO every^a thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:¹

2 A^b time to be born,² and a time to die: a^c time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted:

3 A^d time to kill, and a time to heal: a time to break down, and a time to build up:

4 A^e time to weep, and a time to laugh: a time to mourn, and a time to dance:

5 A^f time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together:³ a time to embrace, and a time to refrain⁴ from embracing:

6 A time to get,⁵ and a time to lose: a time to keep, and a time to cast away:

7 A^h time to rend,⁶ and a time to sew: a time to keep silence, and a time to speak:

8 Aⁱ time to love, and a time to hate: a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 What^o profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

10 I^p have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.⁷

11 ¶ He^q hath made every thing beautiful in his time: also he hath set the world⁸ in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

12 ¶ I^r know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And^s also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.⁹

REFLECTIONS.—Numerous are the contrivances of men to find that in creatures which they should seek, and can only find, in God himself. But how vain and vexing are their diversified, their unnumbered, their utmost attempts! Till our souls return to God in Christ, as our ALL and IN ALL, they will be always like birds wandering from their nests. Thrice happy are they to whom God gives grace to take all things from him; to enjoy him in all things, and all things in him; and to use all things for his glory, and as means of attaching their heart to him and his ways.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1-11. However disjointed, useless, and afflictive the events of Providence may appear to us, God has connected them together in the most amazing beauty and harmony, and orders the season of each as tends most to advance his glory and the good of the people. And whatever worldly wisdom men may have, they will never be capable of comprehending the astonishing extent of the mysteries which God exhibits to their view in his works of creation and providence. 12, 13. It is therefore best in itself, and a benefit from God, to use worldly enjoyments moderately, and to improve them for the advantage of others. 14. God, in his wisdom and providence, seeks to train and discipline men in righteousness, and therefore we ought not to quarrel with but kindly submit to his pleasure. 15. In every age God, by new returns of things, governs the world with great uniformity of appearances. 16, 17. The very power which he has bestowed upon men as a remedy for grievances, is often used to oppress and injure the innocent; and therefore there must be a future general judgment by God himself, in which all things shall be rectified, by clearing the innocent, rewarding the righteous, and condemning the wicked. 18-21. Affected with these views, I wished that God would make men, particularly those who haughtily oppress others, to consider how mean and brutish they are, and to ponder the nature of that immortal soul which chiefly distinguishes them from beasts, whose life entirely vanishes in death.

Ver. 1. 'A time for every purpose,' unfavourable as well as favourable to the man that thinks to get profit of his labour; that is, solid, abiding satisfaction, which he can call, and keep as his own: the one stands at all times over against the other, Ec. 7. 14. C.

Ver. 2. A time to plant, &c. Among the horrors of war is the destruction of woods. A great man who had been at much pains to ornament a wild mountain district with buildings and trees, exclaimed when all had been destroyed, 'I care nothing for the house—I can soon raise a new one; but the trees! the trees! when will they be grown again!'—Note, How grateful should a people be when a land continues to enjoy peace and advance in improvement! This also is of God. C.

Ver. 8. A time to hate. Not a time permitted to hate, but which the carnal mind so perverts, Tit. 3. 3. C.

Ver. 11. More correctly, 'He hath also set eternity in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God doeth from the beginning to the end.' Luther remarks on this passage: 'Man cannot hit upon the work which God does: that is, no man can know beforehand the hour which is ordained above; and however much he may plague himself, he can never know when it will begin or come to an end. It behoves us therefore to say, O Lord, to thee belongs the supreme direction, in thy hand it rests entirely to order and settle everything in the future; under thy control is my life and my death; so long as I need my life, so long thou givest it. And inasmuch as in respect of them no care or thought is of any use, I will act then in regard to other gifts, 14 I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

15 That^a which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past.¹

16 ¶ And, moreover, ⁱI saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

17 I said in mine heart, 'God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time there for every purpose, and for every work.'

18 ¶ I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that² God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are 'beasts.'³

19 For^q that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence⁴ above a beast: for all is vanity.

20 All^h go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

21 ¶ Who knoweth the spirit of man⁵ that goeth⁶ upward,⁷ and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

22 ¶ Whereforeⁱ I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for that is his portion: for 'who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?'

CHAPTER IV.

1 Vanity is increased unto men by oppression, 4 by envy, 5 by idleness, 7 by covetousness, 9 by solitariness, 13 by wilfulness.

SO I^a returned, and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side¹ of using them as they come; care and anxiety I will cast to the winds, and commit all to thee.' P.—Everything beautiful. Among the innumerable evidences of the being and goodness of God, is the beauty which he has so widely diffused. The heavens, the earth, the plants; the birds, the beasts, the insects, the fishes; the eye of affection, and the smile of friendship—all are beautiful—so suited not merely for being, but for well-being, that it is impossible for any but the fool, Ps. 14. 1, to observe them, and remain insensible to the perfections of the Maker of all. C.

Ver. 17. God shall judge the righteous and the wicked. From the present unequal distribution of good and evil, some philosophers have attempted to deduce the doctrine of a future judgment; while others have replied, that if the distribution have continued unequal through so many thousand years, there is therefore the more reason to conclude it will so continue for ever. In the face of this incapacity on the one hand, and sophistry on the other, revelation shows it to be not a questionable inequality of good and evil, but the long-suffering of God with sinners; and establishes the doctrine of future judgment upon his word of truth, and attributes of wisdom and justice. C.

Ver. 22. Rejoice in his own works. True joy in a man's own works lies (1) In the humble acknowledgment that he is 'an unprofitable servant,' Lu. 17. 10, for joy ariseth not from a proud assertion of merit. (2) In discovering that while his own works produce no righteousness, a believer is 'justified without the deeds of the law,' Ro. 3. 28. (3) In finding that, in all he has wrought, not he but grace has been the real worker, 1 Co. 15. 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—We live in a world of changes; but all things outside man's will are governed by God's will. It is absurd then to choose it for our portion, or to take up our rest in it. Readily should we believe, that whatever God has given us is best for us, accommodate ourselves to it, and wait with patience for the full unravelling of what seems intricate and perplexed. Yea, to be entirely satisfied with God's providential disposals is highly necessary, as they neither can nor 14 For^d out of prison he cometh to reign; whereas also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

Ver. 9. Almost all great works have been accomplished by two united spirits. Moses and Aaron, Joshua and Caleb, David and Jonathan, Elijah and Elisha, are striking examples in the Old Testament; and our Saviour is recorded in the New Testament to have sent his disciples 'two and two,' with his divine message of salvation. REFLECTIONS.—Fearfully are men subjected to vanity; it enters not only into all their outward possessions, but even into their worship! Great need have we to take heed to our hearts, to our lips, and to our whole behaviour, in our religious performances, that they may not become means of dishonouring God and destroying ourselves. But, alas! often are they performed in a foolish and inconsiderate manner, our minds being no more serious in them than in an idle dream; and vows are often rashly made, and no less readily broken, in the view of Jesus and his angels and ministers. Very necessary is the constant faith and deep impression of God's greatness and omniscience, and the future judgment, to make us serious and ciried with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase. This is also vanity.

11 When^a goods increase, they are increased that eat them: ^aand what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 The^a sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 There^a is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, ^ariches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But^a those riches perish by evil travail:^a and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 As^b he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

16 And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and ^awhat profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?^a

17 All^a his days also he cateth in darkness, and ^ahe hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.¹

18 ¶ Behold that which I have seen: ^ait is good and comely² for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun all the days³ of his life, which God giveth him; for it is ^ahis portion.

19 Every^a man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice⁴ in his labour; ^athis is the gift of God.

20 For^a he shall not much remember the days of his life;⁶ because ^aGod answereth him in the joy of his heart.⁷

CHAPTER VI.

1 The vanity and misery of riches without use. 3 Of children, 6 and old age without riches. 7 The vanity of sight and insatiable desires. 10 The conclusion of vanities.

THERE is^a an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men;

2 A^b man to whom God hath given riches, cumspect in our worship, and for enabling us to behold, or bear up under, oppression and persecution. God makes the highest to live on the same simple things as the poorest. There is very little to profit or please, and much more to hurt and vex in riches, than we commonly think. The rich man's servant often enjoys more benefit by his wealth than the rich man himself, while he suffers none of the vexation! Nay, the covetous miser gets no comfort in his wealth, and it is swept away, so that his children never come to the possession of it. Much happier is he who receives whatever he has as God's free gift, and uses it to his glory. Little is he concerned at the evils which befall him in life when God favours him with solid comfort.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 7, 8. Whatever wealth men gain by their labour is only available for meat, drink, or the like; but can never satisfy their soul, or even their avarice. And in respect to sensual gratification, fools may be as happy as the wisest; and even a poor man, who has common sense and prudence, may, by his industry, render himself and family as happy as the richest. 9, 10. A comfortable enjoyment of that which we have is far preferable to an insatiable desire and restless pursuit after that which we have not.—And, let our condition be what it may on earth, we shall still remain poor frail creatures, subject to manifold miseries: and it will be the utmost wickedness and madness to complain of our lot, or strive with God to get it rectified.

Ver. 2. If 'God giveth him not power to eat,' why doth he, by his Word and Spirit, 'yet find fault?' Because this denial of power to enjoy is not an evil disposition infused, but a judicial sentence passed upon his covetousness—the warning, if he repent not, of another sentence when he will lift up his eyes being in torments. C.

Ver. 6. Do not all go to one place? Not all spirits, of whom there is no mention; but all bodies that must return to one thing, the dust: to one place, the grave. C.

Ver. 8. What hath the poor that knoweth to walk among the living? He sees the world, ver. 9, in all its beauty; and though he live on charity, yet if his desires be subdued to his station, he has more enjoyment in the mere sight of mountains, and hills, and fields, and fair dwellings, than their owner can obtain if subject to 'wandering desires.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men's riches are often a remarkable curse to them, and render them really more unhappy than the poorest. It is wretched to have wealth and yet no heart to use it for our necessary accommodations in life. And empty are all earthly enjoyments, which can afford no satisfaction to a soul. How unhappy do some men make themselves by the insatiable nature of their own lusts! And yet it is very hard to draw them wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it. ^aThis is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 ¶ If^a a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that ^athe days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and ^aalso that he have no burial;¹ I say, that ^aan untimely birth is better than he:

4 For^a he² cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover, ^ahe hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other.

6 Yea, ^athough he live a thousand ^ayears twice told, yet ^ahath he seen no good: ^ado not all go to one place?

7 ¶ All^a the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the appetite⁴ is not filled.

8 For^a what hath the wise more than the fool?⁵ what hath the poor, that ^aknoweth to walk before the living?

9 Better^a is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire.⁶ This^a is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 ¶ That^a which hath been is named already, and it is known ^athat it is ^aman; ^aneither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.⁸

11 Seeing there be ^amany things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

12 For ^awho knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vain life⁹ which he spendeth as ^aa shadow? ^afor who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

CHAPTER VII.

1 Remedies against vanity are, a good name, 2 mortification, 7 patience, 11 wisdom. 23 The difficulty of getting wisdom.

from a sinful attachment to earthly things, or to persuade them to use them aright; and especially to bring them to receive the almighty Saviour, and his unsearchable riches, for their everlasting treasure and portion.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1. A good reputation is of more advantage for rendering us useful and happy than all the riches, pleasures, and honours of this world: and the day of death, which frees men from the miseries of this world, is preferable to the day of birth, which introduces into a life in which the enjoyments do not sufficiently balance the evils of it. 2-6. It is far safer and more profitable to attend occasions of mourning and faithful reproof, which conduce to make men thoughtful of death and eternity, and render them wise unto salvation; than of revelling, mirth, and folly, which seduce men into heedless dissipation. 7. Grievous oppression will provoke even wise men to unseemly rage and behaviour; and bribes received will corrupt the judgment and pervert the affections of the best. 8. We ought more to regard how a thing turns out at last, than what promising appearances it has at first. 10. In bewailing the evils of our times, we ought carefully to avoid all murmuring at the dispensations of Providence, as if they were not equal. 11. When rich

Ver. 1. Precious ointment. Many unguents were of very great value among the Jews, as appears from Jn. 12. 3, where a single pound was estimated at about £9, 13s. 6d. British. Taking then a Roman penny at $7\frac{1}{2}d.$ or $7\frac{3}{4}d.$ for the daily wages of a labourer, Mat. 20. 12, 13, and comparing it with modern wages in the neighbourhood of cities, the price of the ointment will be greatly increased.—Note. There is no name really good but that of a 'son of God,' 1 Jn. 3: 1; and to such a one, but to no other, the 'day of death' is better than the day of his birth, Job 3: 5. C.

Ver. 15. Solomon prophetically foresees, and, in this verse describes, Christ the only Son of man that ever had righteousness, ver. 20; Ro. 3: 10; and, by necessary consequence, the only one that could perish in 'his righteousness.' The second clause of the verse foresees and describes Antichrist, 2 Th. 2: 8. C.

Ver. 16. Be not righteous over-much. Be not a justifier over-much. This is, a self-justifier. Ro. 1: 17: 3: 22, 26; 5: 18, 19, 21; 2: 13; 1 Co. 1: 30 will discover what is the only true and sufficient righteousness; while Lu. 18, 9-14; Ro. 10: 3; Phi. 3: 9 will discover the basis of that 'over-much' righteousness upon which Pharisees built of old, and upon which the Romanists have raised their acts of supererogation—works even better than what were necessary for the workers' own salvation, and therefore applicable to the salvation of others. C.

Ver. 28. The 'one man' found, being perfect Christ; the woman sought is a perfect church. See Ga. 4: 26, 27, 31; Re. 12: 1, 6, 14-17. This scriptural interpretation, ch. 8: 1, of Solomon's parabolic inquiry, presents no splenetic record of his own experience; no harsh and more than questionable sentence on the relative intellectual and moral attainments and character of the sexes; consequently no violation of scripture upon his own mother; no cruel and unfounded satire on half the population of the earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—A truly good character is very valuable, and ought to be sought for and maintained with the greatest care. Happy is the death of those who die in the Lord! Let us then live much in the serious consideration of our last end. Christian reproofs are highly requisite to make or keep us grave and serious,

CHAPTER VIII.

2 Kings are greatly to be respected. 6 The divine providence is to be observed. 12 It is better with the godly in adversity, than with the wicked in prosperity. 16 The work of God is unsearchable.

WHO is^a as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? ^bA man's wisdom maketh his face to shine,¹ and the ²boldness³ of his face shall be changed.

2 ¶ I^c counsel thee to keep the king's commandment, and that^d in regard of the oath of God.

3 Be^e not hasty to go out of his sight: stand not in an evil thing; for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

4 Where^f the word of a king is, there is power; and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

5 Whoso^g keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing; and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.⁴

6 ¶ Because^h to every purpose there is time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great uponⁱ him.⁶

7 For^j he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be?⁷

8 ¶ There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge^k in that war;⁹ neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All^l this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

10 And^m so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy;¹ and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done. This is also vanity.

amidst so much folly and so many flashes of vain mirth as take place in the world. The very worst of things effectually work for the good of the saints. And a humble and patient resignation to the will of God makes us easy under the most grievous adversity and oppression. Christian wisdom and prudence tend greatly to our direction, safety, happiness, and strength. —They teach us to view God's hand in all that befalls us; to accommodate ourselves to every providence as it comes; and neither to be offended with the prosperity of the wicked nor the adversity of the godly in this life; to guard against all extremes: and, under a deep sense of our own faults, to carry ourselves mildly toward others who are overtaken in a fault. How short-sighted are the wisest of mortals with respect to the most important objects! But great is the mercy if they are brought to see their own leading follies and crimes, and, by the sight thereof, are led to repentance, to a deep sense of the riches of God's grace, and to search out the sinfulness of their heart and nature, till they apprehend themselves utterly vile before God.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. How few are truly wise, and can rightly take up or expound the words or works of God? And yet it is wisdom that renders a man truly honourable, mild, and majestic. 2. The laws of a king ought to be obeyed, not only from fear of the penalty, but from regard to God, whose deputy he is, and to the oath of allegiance sworn to him by the name and in the presence of God, as witness and guardian of it. 3. We must behave ourselves submissively; and never, through passion or discontent, withdraw from his service or cast off our allegiance; for, his power being so great, it is very dangerous to contend with God: 'no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

2 All^a things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good, and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.²

3 This^a is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all, 'yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

4 ¶ For^a him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For^a the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also^a their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 ¶ Go^a thy way, eat thy bread with joy,⁴ and drink thy wine with a merry heart;⁵ for God now accepteth thy works.⁶

8 Let^a thy garments be always white;⁷ and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 Live^a joyfully⁸ with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the 'life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whatsoever^a thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

'the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For^a man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men 'snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and 'it seemed great unto me:

14 There^a was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.¹

16 Then^a said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.²

17 The^a words of the wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom^a is better than weapons of war: but 'one sinner³ destroyeth much good.

CHAPTER X.

1 Observations on wisdom and folly: 16 on the defects of governors; 18 slothfulness, 19 and money. 20 Men's thoughts of kings ought to be reverent.

DEAD flies¹ cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour.

2 A^b wise man's heart is at his right hand; but 'a fool's heart at his left.

3 Yea also, when he that is a fool walketh by the way,² his wisdom³ faileth him, and 'he saith to every one that he is a fool.

4 If the spirit of the ruler⁴ rise up against REFLECTIONS.—What excellency in himself—usefulness among neighbours—honour among friends—and courage among enemies—the true knowledge and fear of God give to a man! But it is foolish and sinful to disregard the laws of our rulers; to be forward in finding fault with their administrations; to persist in faults pointed out to us; or to neglect proper methods of obtaining redress of our grievances. Subjection to magistrates is highly necessary, not only for conscience' sake, but even for avoiding their wrath and securing our own comfort. Certain and irresistible in themselves, though uncertain in their circumstances, are troubles and death to sinful men. But when we see wicked men prosper while the godly are oppressed, there is need of patience and of looking by faith to the unseen, the eternal issue of things! and, in the meanwhile, to make the best use we can of what we meet with, and leave it to the Lord to comprehend and manage his own mysterious works.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1. No man knoweth either love or hatred, &c. No man can tell from prosperity that God loves him, nor from adversity that God hates him. Yet let no one ignorantly say, 'We have then no means of ascertaining whether God loves us or not. No one can so imagine when he reads Jn. 14.23: 1 Jn. 3.13, 19, 27: 4.13, 16. C.

Ver. 2. The 'one event' that is common to all is death, see last clause of ver. 3: and 'this evil under the sun' exists as a perpetual memorial of the fall of man, an awful warning of 'the judgment to come'—a dungeon of darkness (sorrow) to the wicked, and a door of hope and joy to the children of God. C.

Ver. 4. A living dog is better than a dead lion. The 'dead lion' was the guardian emblem of the throne of Solomon, 2 Ch. 9.18, 19, and although 'the like were not made in any kingdom,' yet 'a living dog,' though an unclean and despised animal, would by his mere barking or assault have done more to guard the monarch than the twelve dead lions by which the ascent of Solomon's throne was protected. C.

Ver. 5. The memory of them [the dead] is forgotten. Is this consistent with fact? Is the memory of a great man ever forgotten? Yes, always. The memory of a good or a bad man's actions may be preserved in history and trumpeted by fame; but the memory of every man—the memory of personal affection—the only real memory of the man—is altogether forgotten—his children cease to weep for him—and his grandchildren perhaps knew him not. C.

Ver. 10. 'What a life I have spent in laboriously doing nothing!' was the melancholy reflection of a learned man on his death-bed. And so must it be with the most diligent, if he do not embrace the four departments to which Solomon directs the intellectual and active energies—work, device, knowledge, wisdom. Time spent in bodily works but trains an animal; time spent in artful devices but fosters a serpent; time spent in worldly knowledge but collects a library: it is, when neglecting neither of these, man 'applies his heart to wisdom,' that he puts forth 'all his might,' and fulfils, through grace, the great ends of his creation. C.

Ver. 11. Chance. The meaning of this much-abused word may be found by contrasting the end of ver. 11 with the end of ver. 12, where 'evil time' and 'suddenly' are expository of 'time and chance.' Chance therefore signifies, not what is below or above the direction of Providence, but what comes unexpectedly and suddenly upon thoughtless ignorant men. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy to believers that they, and all their works, are in the hand and under the influence of God, their reconciled Father. Yet how often does he use them with as much severity in this world as if they were the most profligate sinners! Great is the mercy that there is at hand, when Providence so little distinguishes the righteous here in their condition either in life or in death. Remarkable are the advantages which men have in this life for bettering their states, tempers, or hopes. But quickly death puts an end to them all! to all opportunities of preparing for eternity; and to all our intimacies, enjoyments, or affections in this world. What need then have we soberly to relish the comforts of this life, relative to our spirits, our food, our raiment, and our relations. Quickly should we work out our salvation with fear and trembling while we have opportunity, as we know not how soon our soul may be required of us. Carefully should we acknowledge God, and depend on him for direction in all our paths, as without his assistance we can obtain nothing good, but must fall into misery and ruin. Yet how stupid are most men, who neither regard wisdom itself, nor those who thereby do them the greatest services! It is necessary that we should always act from regard to the authority of God, and from a principle of love, as men may perhaps disregard the best works that we can do for them. But much more useful are wise discourses than all the noisy harangues which fools admire. And even one impenitent and presumptuous sinner is often a great plague to a family, a church, or nation.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. A little imprudence or wickedness much hurts the character of one who has been reckoned uncommonly wise. 2. A wise man's thee, 'leave not thy place; for 'yielding⁵ paci-fieth great offences.

5 There^a is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth from⁶ the ruler;

6 Folly^a is set in great 'dignity, and the rich⁸ sit in low place.⁹

7 I^a have seen servants upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth.

8 He^a that diggeth a pit shall fall into it; and whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him.

9 Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby.

10 If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet
the edge, then must he put to more strength:
but 'wisdom is profitable to direct.

11 Surely 'the serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babler¹ is no better.

12 The^a words of a wise man's mouth are gracious;² but^a the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.

13 The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness; and the end of his talk³ is mischievous madness.

14 A^a fool also is full of words;⁴ a man cannot tell what shall be; and 'what shall be after him, who can tell him?

15 The^a labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them, because he knoweth not how to go to the city.⁵

16 ¶ Woe^a to thee, O land, when thy king is a child, and thy princes eat in the morning!

understanding and inward abilities are always in readiness to direct him in his work: but a fool is unready in all he does, and knows not how to manage his affairs.
3. Nay, even in the most ordinary business his weakness appears, and he plainly discovers his folly to every one. 4. If the magistrate takes offence at thee, never desert thy station or employment, or withdraw thy subjection: but by submissive and patient carriage endeavour to pacify him. 5-7. Very often, to the great hurt of the subjects, magistrates employ, as their deputies and agents, persons of a weak or mercenary spirit, while persons of ability and true dignity are overlooked and contemned. 8. Both prince and people have need to beware of innovations; for he that endeavours to ensnare and ruin another shall thereby perish himself:
and he that passes his due bounds to wrong others, brings unexpected mischief upon himself. 9. He that rashly attempts things too high and hard for him shall be hurt by it; and he that deals with men of stubborn tempers endangers himself. 10. If a man do not use proper means for his work, it will cost him so much more labour and pains. Wisdom is therefore necessary and profitable to direct in the choice and use of means. 11. As unenchanted serpents are disposed to bite, so rash and talkative persons are sure to do mischief with their words unless they be wisely prevented.
12. Wise men's words being pious, friendly, and profitable, procure them favour: but foolish, slanderous, and sinful speeches suddenly and irrecoverably ruin a man.
13. A fool at the first talks in a useless and impertinent manner; and at length he grows insolent and abusive, sticking at nothing wicked or malicious. 14. A fool pours forth his incoherent babblings, and pretends to know everything secret or future; and no one can tell what he will say next, or what mischief his foolish speeches may produce. 15. Fools find their work tedious and wearisome, because they want sense and prudence to manage the most ordinary business, even where the rules are ever so plain. 16. It is a great misery to a nation when their magistrates are ignorant, wilful, and unexperienced, and minding their sensual pleasures when they should be employed about the business of their office. 17. But happy is that nation whose magistrates are of truly excellent dispositions and endowments, and who use the enjoyments of life, not to satisfy inordinate lusts, but to fit them for their business. 18. Through sloth and indolence, estates, families, and nations are gradually reduced to wretchedness and ruin. 19. Even feasting affords but a very slight and transient pleasure; but a plentiful estate procures every outward advantage: we should therefore beware of spending it in luxury. 20. It is neither lawful nor safe to condemn, reproach, or wish evil to magistrates, however secretly, as it may be very quickly and surprisingly discovered to them.

Ver. 1. Folly. Solomon means by folly, (1) Childishness, Pr.
22.11, that is, waywardness of temper, being easily disturbed; preference of toys to things of real value; and preference of amusement and self-will to learning and duty. (2) Want of prudent forecast, Pr. 13.14. (3) Deceitfulness, Pr. 14.3. (4)
A hasty temper, Pr. 14.29. (5) Pleasure in other men's folly, Pr.
15.21. (6) Rejecting good advice, Ec. 4.13. When folly is employed to designate the highest criminality, as De. 22.21; Jos.
7.15; Ho. 2.10, it can easily be reduced to one or more of these heads. C.

Ver. 2. The wise man honours his heart; that is, his affections and their objects, by placing them at his right hand, the position of honour. The fool degrades all that he should hold dear. C.

Ver. 9. That is, he that doeth these things fraudulently and violently, as in digging a pit, or breaking a hedge, ver. 8. C.

Ver. 11. This translation is founded on the general opinion of 'serpent-charming' by music being a rite and not a juggling imposition: a matter still undecided. May not the verse be translated, 'Surely the serpent will bite without asking' (that is to give warning of danger): and a calumniator is no better? C.

Ver. 16. Either really a child, a minor, under a selfish regency, living in luxury, and abusing their power; or one of those who are always children, and never attain to the majority of intellect, because never acquainted with the Son of God, who alone can make men free, Jn. 8.32, 36. C.

Ver. 20. Solomon warns against an uncharitable thought, because it would soon break out into a voice, and certainly be discovered. And thus he admonishes, not for the sake of a facti-tious loyalty, but because he that frets himself into cursing the king will speedily be in danger of cursing his God. See Is. 8.

21.—Note. The bird is most probably a reference to the use of carrier pigeons for speedy and secret missives. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men of character have need to be careful, lest they should inadvertently ruin it. Many are extremely ill qualified for the business they take in hand; and imprudently expose their own folly and wickedness. But it is very dangerous when either rulers or subjects leave their proper stations and attempt violent changes of the public settlement. Vain and imprudent talking is often attended with the most hurtful consequences. It is necessary then to have our words always with grace, seasoned with salt. An imprudent management of their business frequently robs men of both the comfort and the benefit thereof. But it is a great mercy for nations when rulers and subjects do all diligently and prudently attend to their proper work, and act according to their station, neither doing nor speaking evil, but provoking one another to love and to good works.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1, 2. Cheerfully lay out thyself to bestow the necessities of life upon the poor, who are entirely unable to requite thee; and so God shall plentifully reward thee for it in this life, or in that which is to come. And however great the number of needy objects be, bestow that which is necessary upon them all, according to thine utmost ability; for the opportunity of liberality may soon be lost to thee, and an evil time may quickly come, in which thou wilt infinitely need God to be the supplier of thy own wants. 3, 4. He bestows plenty upon men, in order that with it they may do good to others. And however undeserving the objects be on whom they religiously bestow their charity, they shall not lose their reward.—They that withhold it till every objection be answered, will never bestow it. 5, 6. As thou knowest mities and troubles of old age, and the fears and pangs of death, in the full assurance that Jesus loved them, and gave himself for them! But, alas! how difficult is it to persuade us of the emptiness of all created things! This truth needs to be inculcated a thousand times over. Nor will that avail, unless the Holy Ghost inscribe it on our heart. It is necessary then that all preachers should be sent and qualified by Christ and his Spirit; and that, by every possible mean, they should labour to fix the truths of God in the con-sciences, understandings, affections, and memories of their hearers. And let us, in our religious course, attend chiefly to the principal points; and always act under the awe, and in the faith and hope, of the last judgment.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

The most common view of the Book of Ecclesiastes represents it as 'a philosophical inquiry after the summum bonum, or chief good of man; in which Solomon states the various opinions on the subject, the result of his own dear-bought experience in search of the respective enjoyments of human wisdom and human folly.' Without altogether excluding this view, others think Solomon's main design was to 'prove the immortality of the soul, or rather the necessity of another state after this life, by such arguments as may be deduced from reason and experience.'

Now, in all this, it is not a little remarkable—it is not a little lamentable—that it never seems to have occurred to the learned authors of these opinions, that Christ and his church formed any direct object of Solomon's investigation! Yet how strange if the wisest man could have written a book in which the 'Wisdom of God' obtained no place!

'Much of the obscurity, it has been observed, which is generally admitted to exist in the book of Ecclesiastes, arises from not attending to the train of argument proposed by Solomon, which difficulty the ordinary division of chapters and verses is supposed to have contributed to increase' (Horne's Introduction).

Now that, like other portions of Scripture, the book of Ecclesiastes contains some or many things 'hard to be understood,' cannot be denied. But has not its peculiar obscurities arisen from neglecting the beams of 'the Sun of Righteousness' shining so brightly in all its pages, rather than from any inattention to the mere train of a philosophical argument? That Ecclesiastes is a book of argument is admitted; but not in any other sense than that in which the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews are books of argument. That is, the statements, illustrations, and conclusions are never of man, but from the Spirit of God.

If by 'wisdom' is to be understood anything less than the knowledge that 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself,' 2 Co. 5. 19, then, indeed, is the book of Ecclesiastes not only obscure, but often unintelligible. But if the 'wisdom' sought and commended by Solomon be the knowledge of 'Christ, the wisdom of God,' then the obscurity of the book becomes illuminated, and 'he may run that readeth it,' Hab. 2. 2.

Another source of its obscurity may be found in the principle of interpretation ordinarily adopted—a principle neither warranted by anything in the book itself, nor by authority of any other book of Holy Scripture. This principle is the assumption that the book 'was written by Solomon in his old age, after he had repented of his sinful practices; and when, having seen and observed much, as well as having enjoyed everything that he could wish, he was fully convinced of the vanity of everything but piety towards God' (Horne's Introduction). Now, that Solomon wrote the book at an advanced period of his reign, is obvious from ch. 2. 4–11; but though all his recorded labours terminate in 'vexation,' there is not one single reference to any special 'sinfulness' in his pursuits—an omission totally inconsistent with the genius of Scripture, which never fails in the most direct acknowledgment and condemnation of the sins of its chiefest characters. Had the book, therefore, been a confession of sin and retraction of error, these must have furnished its most plain and prominent statements. Sin would have been called sin, and not mere 'vanity and vexation of spirit;' for these words, however strong and expressive, come far short of that self-abasement and abhorrence which the consciousness of sin against God must produce, whenever his Spirit leads the sinner to repentance. The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable—Ecclesiastes is neither an acknowledgment nor retraction of sin in the inspired author, but an illustration of the insufficiency of all 'treasures on earth' for the purpose of inducing men to 'lay up their treasures in heaven,' to 'set their affections on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.'

But the chief source of obscurity may be detected in two principles that would reduce light itself into darkness,—the first, taking words in a sense the writer never intended,—the second, interpreting by figures of speech that he never employed. Examples of the first may be found in the meaning attached to 'good' in ch. 2. 24, and 3. 13, &c., where the real good intended is commonly referred to unlimited sensual indulgence; and the second is exemplified ch. 11. 9, where a plain and godly admonition is commonly interpreted as a bitter irony.

In the preceding notes these arbitrary principles of interpretation have been altogether rejected; and, in subordination to the teaching of the Spirit, the book has been treated as its own expositor.—C.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON

Could not be a nuptial hymn composed in honour of any of his wives; for it was not composed till after the tower of Lebanon was built, ch. 7. 4; and so not till about twenty years after his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter. Many of the emblems used in it—as to be made a keeper of the vineyard, to have a head like Carmel, a nose like the tower of Lebanon, eyes like fish-pools, teeth like a flock of sheep, and to be terrible as an army with banners, &c.—if applied to a fine lady, are absurd to the last degree: but if the whole be understood of the union and fellowship between Christ and his people, it will appear most exalted, instructive, and animating. The name of God is not found in it, more than in Esther; nor could the continued allegory of the book well admit of it. But the agreement of its matter and language with other passages of Scripture—as Is. 54. 5; 62. 4, 5; Ho. 2. 19, 20; Mat. 25. 1–10; 9. 15; 3. 9; Ro. 7. 4; 2 Co. 11. 2; Ep. 5. 32; Re. 19. 7; 21. 2, 9; and especially with Ps. xlv.; its majestic style; its efficacy on the consciences of men for promoting their spiritual comfort and holiness; the sincerity of the bride in acknowledging her faults; and in fine, the general reception of it by the Jewish and Christian churches; sufficiently prove it inspired of God. To such as read it with a carnal and wanton mind, it will be the savour of death unto death: but to such as, acquainted with fellowship with Christ, peruse it with a spiritual and heavenly frame, it will prove a savour of life unto life, a counterpart of their gracious experience. It is a dialogue; in which the speakers are Jesus Christ, the blessed Bridegroom of souls; the church, which is his body and bride, and every particular saint in it; and the daughters of Jerusalem or Zion, who are either nominal professors of the true religion, or at best young and weak converts. The scope of it is to represent Christ and his people's mutual esteem of, desire after, and delight in one another. And as the bride denotes either the church in general, or a particular believer, the members, &c., attributed to her must have different significations assigned them, according as the one or the other is understood.

[The title of this book, 'THE SONG OF SONGS,' is generally understood to assert its eminence amongst or superiority over all other songs. Some eminent Hebraists, however, are disposed to translate the title 'The Series of Songs;' and this seems more consonant to the modesty of the sacred writer, who would be very unlikely to assume any special eminence, also to that equality which divine inspiration implies amongst the books of Scripture, as well as to the structure of the book itself, which changes so rapidly its speakers, time, place, and objects.]

The ancient Jews, without exception, considered it a book divinely inspired, and inserted it in their sacred writings. By our Lord it was consequently authorized, when he exhorted the Jews to 'search the Scriptures;' and by Paul, when he affirmed that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God.' With the full conviction of its divine origin, it was newly translated into Greek, in the second century, by three eminent Christian divines; and in the third, it was inserted by Origen in his Hexapla, who also wrote some discourses explanatory of its sacred meaning.

Notwithstanding this concurrence, its divine authority is said to have been questioned in the fifth century by Theodore of Mopsuestia; and occasionally, down to the present day, various objections against its inspiration have been started by Christian divines. Now, without questioning either the objects or the principles of these objectors, it is not a little to be lamented that their learning has been so misapplied. For if the reception of the book by the Jewish church, and its approbation by our Lord and his apostles, be not, to a Christian, sufficient evidence of its divine authority, any higher evidence it must be impossible to obtain; and if this evidence is to be rejected in the case of one book, there is no ground for its sufficiency in the case of any other.

The objections to the divine authority of this book have arisen, as in the case of Ecclesiastes, from assuming an unauthorized principle of interpretation, and pronouncing the book a mere marriage song, and consequently unfitted for religious instruction. But again, whereas in Ecclesiastes, a book confessedly didactic, the ordinary and natural application of words has been rejected—in the Song of Solomon, a book confessedly written in similitudes or parables, the emblematic application of words has been rejected.

The Christian disciple will, however, make light of these cavils, and calmly repose upon the authentication of the book derived from Christ and his apostles. And while so reposing, he will find a treasury filled to overflowing with the unsearchable riches of Christ. He will be led into a banqueting-house of boundless hospitality; he will mingle with a company of purity and love; he will traverse gardens of loveliest flowers and sweetest odours; he will repose beneath trees with coolest shade and ripest fruits; thence will he climb the Lebanon heights of contemplation, and gaze upon the lovely land that lies beneath his feet, the land of his inheritance and his home, where Christ is the King, saints the subjects, and love the law; where the subjects themselves are kings and priests unto God, clad in the robes of the Lamb's immaculate righteousness, and crowned with the diadem of his un fading glory.

Some eminent interpreters have considered this book as a sacred drama extending through seven days, and have divided it into scenes, each of a day's continuance. Others have concluded it to be a succession of idyls, or little poems, with no connection of time, place, or person: but merely possessing some common object as their only principle of union.

In the following notes these principles of interpretation will be diffidently—on account of their authors—but firmly rejected, from their want of any but conjectural authority. The principles of interpretation adopted will be (1) The grammatical, including the singularity, or plurality, or sexes of the speakers. (2) Change of place. (3) Change of time. (4) Change of objects. (5) Change of sentiment or action. (6) The parallel—comparing spiritual with spiritual, explaining what here is unknown by what is elsewhere acknowledged. By following these natural principles, the book will be found a succession of beautiful, impressive, and instructive emblems of natural pictures, representing spiritual originals—an outward form of what is earthly, fabricated for little children, but with an inward spirit of what is only intended for perfect men. CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Blessed Jesus, upon whom I have been meditating, by thy Word and Spirit give me intimate fellowship with thee in thy ordinances, and full assurances of thy friendship: for the manifestations of thy redeeming love are more pleasant, reviving, and strengthening to my soul than any created enjoyments. 3. Such is the pleasant and powerful influence of thy mediatorial excellencies, offices, relations, and fulness of spirit and grace, that sincere and holy souls cannot but love thee with their whole heart. 4. By thy almighty influence direct and bring me into the nearest enjoyment of thyself, that I, and others excited by me, may pleasantly comply with thy alluring power, and follow hard after thee in the paths of duty.—Jesus, the King of his church, has already brought me into the most ravishing nearness to and spiritual intimacy with himself; therefore will we rejoice in him as our ALL and IN ALL; we will think of, believe, and extol his love above all created delights: for every candid and sincere professor heartily esteems, loves, and delights in thee. 5. In myself, and in respect of manifold infirmities, scandals, reproaches, and persecutions, I am deformed; but in my Head Christ, and as clothed with his righteousness, and endued by his Spirit, gifts, and graces, I am truly comely, O ye nominal professors and weak believers:—I am outwardly mean, but inwardly rich and glorious. 6. Look not therefore upon me with disdain, disaffection, or delight in my distresses, nor stumble at religion on account of them; for sore persecutions, tribulations, and temptations are befallen me: hypocritical professors, false teachers, and my own inward corruptions, enraged at my connection with Christ, and my cleaving to him, have oppressed me with the basest drudgery, and entangled me in carnal cares and secular affairs, which have hindered me from, or retarded me in, the due improvement of my own office, opportunities, gifts, and graces. 7. But, O all-compassionate Redeemer, whom I love with my whole heart, and above everything else, discover to me, by thy Word and Spirit, which is thy true church, and which are those assemblies wherein thou art remarkably present, and to whom thou affordest spiritual support and consolation amidst all their scorching persecutions and troubles: for why should I, whom thou hast redeemed, and who have sincerely devoted my whole self to thee, be left to associate myself with empty professors, false teachers, and inward idols, who, notwithstanding their pretences of friendship, are thy enemies and rivals on earth!

CHRIST. 8. O ye excellent ones of the earth, beautified with my salvation, righteousness, and grace, and whose church state is adorned with my ordinances, if your knowledge of duty be still indistinct, inquire after, observe, and follow the example of the saints in former and present ages; and let weak believers and young converts, with their weak or languishing graces, carefully attend my public ordinances dispensed by my faithful pastors. 9. And be encouraged in my love; for, notwithstanding the weakness which you feel, and the self-deformity which you discover, I your Redeemer and Husband have, and will render you comely and active, and will give you sufficient strength and courage to withstand and conquer your spiritual enemies, if you will only be faithful. 10. Whilst your church state is beautifully adorned by divine oracles, ordinances, gifts, and graces, professors, and ministers, your particular conversation before the world appears beautifully marked with a variety of precious and holy qualities, and your faith, by which you are united to my person as your Head, is precious and glorious in itself, and is productive of every good word and work. 11. And I, my Father, and the blessed Spirit will for ever continue and increase these spiritual ornaments in true believers.

BELIEVERS. 12. O that we may enjoy these blessed and ornamenting operations of thy grace! For, whilst thou, Jesus, dost converse familiarly with us in thine ordinances, how pleasant are thy promises and truths to our heart, and how vigorous and active, and acceptable to thee, are our implanted graces. 13. And, even during the night of trouble or time, how delightfully art thou, our beloved Husband, found in the public and private ordinances of thy grace, and art entertained by the most cordial embracements of our faith and love! 14. O what an inexpressibly delightful and precious system of excellencies, fountain of graces, source of blessings, repository of promises, treasure of pardoning, healing, comforting, nourishing, quickening, and refreshing influence, art thou to our heart!

SUPHENIAH ROAD—A SCENE IN THE MOST BEAUTIFUL CITY OF KING SOLOMON'S DOMINIONS. [Song of Solomon, i:1.]—The above is a picture of a road in Supheniah, a suburb of Damascus. This is given here because it illustrates a scene in the dominion of Solomon. Damascus was one of the wealthy and beautiful cities in his kingdom. In passing from Jerusalem to Palmyra, the city Solomon built in the wilderness, Damascus would be on the direct route, and in going to Palmyra to-day tourists usually start from Damascus. In the respect that Damascus and Palmyra occupy oases in the midst of surrounding deserts, they are alike. There would be no Damascus were it not for the Abana river. The stream breaks through a gorge in the Lebanon mountains a few miles above the city, and at once begins a warfare with the desert. For 25 miles the conflict between the river and the burning sands of Syria is expressed in a luxurious and tropical vegetation.

9 I have compared thee, "O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

10 Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

11 ¶ We will make thee borders of gold with studs of silver.

12 ¶ While the King sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof.

13 A bundle of myrrh is my well-beloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.

14 My beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of Engedi.

15 Behold, thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes.

16 ¶ Behold, thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant: also our bed is green.

17 The beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters of fir.

CHAPTER II.

1 The mutual love of Christ and his church. 8 The hope, 10 and calling of the church. 14 Christ's care of the church. 16 The profession of the church, her faith and hope.

I AM the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys.

2 As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters.

CHRIST. 15. How comely and glorious is my church, as endowed with ordinances, and reformed by my Word and Spirit; and how adorned with intelligent, sincere, peaceful, peace-proclaiming, and faithful pastors, who search into gospel truths, and watch over, direct, and go before every individual member of it. And how certainly, and eminently comely, is every believing soul clothed with my righteousness, and endowed with my grace! How quick and discerning their spiritual understanding! How chaste, sincere, and single their affections, without the least glance of spiritual whoredom!

BELIEVERS. 16. But, blessed and divine Husband, what is all my derived comeliness in respect of thine, in thy person, offices, relations, and grace? How delightful are all these to my heart! How pleasantly glorious is thy promise, and the ordinances of thy gospel, for the conversion and consolation of souls, and for rendering them fruitful in good works! 17. And strong, durable, and lasting is thy church, in which I am honoured to dwell, and consists of such parts and members as keep the faith; and permanent are all her oracles, ordinances, and offices.

Ver. 2. The word me shows that the bride "the Lamb's wife," Re. 21. 9, is the first speaker; thy, addressing her, shows that the virgins, the church in her state of waiting and progress, reply. See Mat. xxv. C.

Ver. 5. I am black as the tents of Kedar—a humble acknowledgment of sin, in which words the bride speaks; but comely as the curtains of Solomon, a recognition of the sin, but an assertion of the beauty of faith and repentance, in which words the virgins speak. C.

Ver. 6. Look not upon me, &c. She speaks as a village maiden, accustomed, as all village maidens are in the East, to work in the vineyards; and so exposed to the burning sun that her skin was dark when compared with the fair daughters of Jerusalem. Though tanned with the sun she was still beautiful. What a noble figure of the church! Bearing the marks of the world's toils and persecutions; yet showing on every feature the lineaments of heaven. P.

Ver. 7. There is here a new picture, changing from a banquet-house to a shepherd gone after his flocks. "Why should I be as a stranger by the flocks of thy companions?" Why should I, as a stranger, follow any teacher, any spiritual feeder, but my Lord? C.—Eastern shepherds always lead their flocks to some shady spot, if possible beside a fountain, and leave them to rest there for one or two hours during the fierce noonday heat. This is a favourite time for the shepherds themselves to meet with their friends and to recline under shade of tree or rock. P.

Ver. 9. I have compared thee, O my partner. Not for personal accomplishments, but for costliness and beauty of ornaments: "even the ornaments of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of Heaven, of great price." C.

Ver. 10. The maidens of Palestine wear an ornament composed of gold coins strung together in a row so as to overlap like scale-armour. It passes over the head, down each cheek in front of the ear, and is fastened under the chin. Instead of coins, thin discs of gold and silver were used in ancient times. They also wear numerous chains of gold or silver round the neck. The words of the text are therefore descriptive of a maiden decked in her ornaments. It is also worthy of note that fully caparisoned horses have their bridles covered with little plates of the precious metals, and have also numbers of chains and amulets strung round their necks. How graphic therefore are the words, "I have likened thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots!" P.

Ver. 14. Camphire. The camphire is a plant, the Lausonia inermis of botanists. Of the dried leaves an unguent is made, called henna, with which the females of Syria and Egypt dye their nails. Its flowers have a sweet perfume, and eastern maidens often place bunches of them in their bosoms. The plant is still found at Engedi. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How precious and pleasant Christ is to believing souls! Ardently do they pant after further communications of his grace; sensible that they can do nothing of themselves, but Jesus must do all in them and for them. He takes the sweetest delight in speedily answering their prayers, and satisfying their souls with his loving-kindness; though often, amidst his kind visits, their outward state is such as looks-on are apt to stumble at. With what pain and grief do lively saints lament the want of frequent and intimate fellowship with him and his people in the ordinances! But he is ready to direct and comfort them in this condition. He has done, and will do, for them the most amazing things, in furnishing them with his righteousness, his grace, and his glory. All their life, their strength, their grace, their comfort, their happiness come from him. His heart is full of high esteem and unbounded affection for them. And, through familiar fellowship with him, they receive and enjoy his comforting, sanctifying, and blessed influence.

CHAPTER II. CHRIST. 1. I am indeed glorious in my person as God-man, and in my mediatorial relations, estates, and works; and am infinitely comely, refreshing, and medicinal to every believing soul. 2. And partaking of my comeliness, righteousness, and grace, thou, my church, art incomparably more excellent and useful than all the societies, and true believers than all the persons on earth.

BELIEVERS. 3. But infinitely more my beloved Jesus excels angels and men in everything gracious, glorious, and operative. Often have I, under the covert of his righteousness, love, power, and providence, fearless of danger from heaven, earth, or hell, believingly viewed, admired, and applied to my soul, his person, offices, and relations, with all the pardon, peace, acceptance, adoption, sanctification, comfort, and endless glory, which flow therefrom! 4. Powerfully has he admitted me to partake of his fulness, in the most ravishing manner, in his Word and ordinances. And the manifestations of his love have effectually

3 As the apple-tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons. I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste.

4 He brought me to the banqueting-house, and his banner over me was love.

5 Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples; for I am sick of love.

6 His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me.

7 I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

8 ¶ The voice of my beloved! behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

9 My beloved is like a roe, or a young hart: behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, showing himself through the lattice.

10 ¶ My beloved spake, and said unto me, "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away:

11 For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone;

12 The flowers appear on the earth; the protected me from enemies; and encouraged and animated me to my spiritual work and warfare. 5. Ye ministers and fellow-professors, often have I needed your sympathy, direction, and comfort, under my sad perplexity and desertion. But, oh! if you could now help me to bear up under these ravishing discoveries and communications of Jesus' love! Oh for further and unspeakably more enlarged enjoyment of him, to strengthen me for supporting under, and improving what I have; 6. But why do I ask your assistance? While I enjoy the true, the delightful, and intimate embraces of an incarnate God, and have the joys of his promise imparted to my soul, his word, power, and grace marvellously uphold, delight, and invigorate my heart. 7. I therefore charge you, my fellow-professors, by everything kind, pleasant, or delightful, that ye disturb not my fellowship with him, nor do, nor cause me to do, anything which may provoke him to withdraw this sensible visit of his love. 8. Lo! though he had withdrawn, yet I now hear his voice, in the ministry of his Word and motions of his Spirit. Behold, he comes removing and triumphing over every hindrance of my fellowship with him! 9. Behold, in the most lively, lovely, and affectionate manner, he comes forward in the influence of his grace, and unto an actual assumption of our nature! Behold he, the substance of all our ceremonies, manifests his glorious and gracious excellencies, through them, and vouchsafes some obscure and transient glimpses of himself in every ordinance! 10. In what a heart-melting manner he said to my soul, Rouse up thyself from thy partial deadness, sloth, and security, and disentangle thyself more fully from the snares of the world and thy own lusts. Exercise thy faith in the most active, bold, and assured degree, in partaking of the most delightful fellowship with me: 11. For all impediments, arising from the wrath of God, the guilt or dominion of sin, or from terrible troubles, are now removed. 12-14. Now are come the days of power and times of love, in which the dispensations of the gospel are attended with almighty influence, and multitudes are, to their everlasting joy and comfort, converted to me, and rendered fruitful in good works. Arise, therefore, my poor, meek, chaste, but often persecuted bride; let no despondency, no sense of thy unworthiness, deter thee from approaching my presence in prayer and other holy duties: for both thy person and services are accepted by me, and are inexpressibly amiable in my sight. 15. And while ecclesiastical rulers take pains, both by doctrine and discipline, to free my church from false teachers, even those who

CHAPTER III.

1 The church's fight and victory in temptation. 6 The church glorieth in Christ.

BY night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

2 I will rise now, and go about the city in the streets, and in the broad ways I will seek him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

This description of spring is equally beautiful and graphic. In Palestine the flowers burst forth in all their richness as if by magic; the groves are all alive with the voice of song; and from every rock and tree the sweet cooing of the turtle-dove is heard. The luxuriance, the brightness, the melody of early spring make Palestine a paradise.—P.

have but begun to vent their errors and irregularities, as they greatly mar her purity, peace, order, and beauty, and are especially apt to mislead weak believers, let every one be careful to search out, and mortify his own inward lusts, as these, if indulged, break up the work of grace in their hearts.—16. This kind inviter is my glorious Husband and Mediator, given of God to, and accepted by, me; and I am his by the Father's goodness, his own love and conquest, and by my surrender of myself to him. And O the infinite delight he takes in his people, and to converse with them in his ordinances! 17. Till the gospel day, in its pleasant light and powerful influence, break, and the shadows of Jewish ceremonies flee away; nay, till the day of perfect glory dawn, and all the shadows of desertion, temptation, and trouble are fled; do thou, blessed Jesus, often surprise me with the discoveries of thy glory and communications of thy grace, notwithstanding whatever hindrances, guilt, and wickedness are found with me.

Ver. 1. 'I am a wild rose of the fields, a lily of the valleys.'—Such a humiliating description as every self-examining believer will give of himself in comparison with the attainments of others. C.

Ver. 3. Judea is not celebrated for the apple, but its citrons were reckoned superior to those of all other lands; and the citron is therefore most probably the fruit-tree of this emblem. C.

Ver. 7. I charge you. This cannot be any form of adjuration, which would be both superstitious and impious. The reference is to the timidity of the startled gazelle, and the fleetness with which it escapes when disturbed in its slumbers. Spiritually, it inculcates 'praying, waiting, and watching,' for the Lord's coming in providence and grace. C.

Ver. 10-13. From verse 10 to 13 is presented one of the most beautiful emblems of Christ, by his Word and Spirit, inviting the soul of a believer, or the whole church, to arise from sleep, Ro. 13. 11, and follow him. C.

Ver. 14. The emblem here changes to a scene descriptive of the safety of the believer, or the church—defended as by a rock, and hid in the secret places of the precipices. C.—In this verse the dove—not the turtle-dove, but the pigeon—is the emblem selected. Its favourite haunts are the clefts of the rocks, and the retired recesses of the steep stair-like ravines. From these its soft cooing is heard during the spring season. P.

Ver. 16. He feedeth among the lilies. Let him feed (his flock) among the lilies.—The emblems of believers, adorned with grace and endowed with righteousness without their own merit, Ro. 3. 20-28; 4. 4-6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O the unbounded glory and infinite usefulness of Jesus Christ, and the glory and usefulness of his people as connected with him! What must be the immediate enjoyment of God and the Lamb, when the imperfect and mediate enjoyment on earth is sometimes so transporting! Unhappy for ever is that heart which would change one hour's fellowship with Christ for all the pleasures, honours, and riches on earth. Tenderly should it be managed, and carefully improved and maintained. A small thing may interrupt it; and with the greatest reluctance and grief should the believing soul mourn over its want. Strong as death must be the love of our Redeemer, which makes him come to his people over every mountain of distance, darkness, wrath, provocation, and pollution. How earnest and affecting are his invitations to familiar intercourse with himself! And what a change in the world is made by his oracles, ordinances, and influence! But wicked ministers in a church, and carnal lusts in a heart, are our greatest plagues, and should be carefully removed. And the assured faith of our relation to Christ will make us effectually to long and cry for frequent and familiar fellowship with him.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. In time of desertion and trouble, and of a secure and slothful frame, in prayer and other private ordinances, I endeavoured to regain the sensible communications of Jesus' love: I persevered therein, but without any discernible success. 2. Stirring up myself therefore to a more active and lively frame of spirit, I attended the public ordinances of his worship, in order to obtain communion with himself. I often repeated my endeavours, but met with nothing but disappointments and discouragements. 3. Faithful ministers, who with care and labour inspect the souls of men, were often directed to speak pointedly to my case, which encouraged me to open it to them in familiar conversation, and beg their assistance in furthering my fellowship with him. 4. Not resting in duties and ordinances, by faith I essayed still more earnest and immediate application to Jesus himself. He graciously vouchsafed me his sensible presence. Then my heart clave to him by a lively exercise of faith, and by the most ardent and resolute affection. I carefully avoided everything which tended to disturb our fellowship or provoke his withdrawal; and not only laboured to get intimate enjoyment and full assurance of his love to myself, but to have his promised presence in the church and the public ordinances thereof. 5. I therefore again charge you, my fellow-professors or saints, to avoid everything which may in the least tend to mar my intercourse with him.

DAUGHTERS OF JERUSALEM. 6. What amazing persons are those who, separated from the world in affection, and delivered from former troubles, mount up heavenward in faith, in love, in spiritual-mindedness, and in holy desires and conversation;—all acceptable to God through Jesus' merits and intercession, and endowed with the manifold and precious graces of his Holy Spirit!

BELIEVERS. 7, 8. Nay, admire not us, nor the glories which we have freely received from Christ; but behold that new covenant of grace, and that familiar fellowship with him, which are the causes of everything amiable in us, and in which we are watched over and protected, amidst all our dangers, by almighty perfections, attendant angels, and vigilant ministers. 9, 10. Behold how, according to his deep compassion and universal love, he has not only assumed our nature in the most precious and useful form, but has formed a new covenant, and a gospel dispensation,—reared on stable, precious, and supporting promises,—founded in the unchangeable and everlasting love and purpose of God, in which men are protected by his righteousness and royal power; and his unbounded love makes everything proper, refreshing, and supporting for the members of his church, in order to transport them, in fellowship with him, through this world into the heavenly state! 11. Go forth then, my fellow-professors, from your unregeneracy, your self-righteousness, your filthy lusts, your carnal cares and sluggish frames; and with earnestness, faith, love, and wonder observe Jesus, our Prince of Peace, not only crowned by his Father with the highest glory and honour, but even by all the true members of his church, in their acceptance of him, and submission to him, as their Husband, Saviour, and Lord; particularly in that day of power, and time of love in which, to his inexpressible satisfaction, they are united to him by faith.

Ver. 1. 'In the night.'—That state of comparative darkness in which the believer and the whole church are still surrounded. See Ro. 13. 11, 12.—I sought him in his Word for direction, and in his promises for support.—I found him not. The seeker does not say, I believed him not, but 'I found him not,' because for more exercise of faith and faithful seeking, he calls the soul (the church) to add to private contemplation and prayer the observance and use of Christian converse and public ordinances. See ver. 2. C.

Ver. 6. The emblem here changes to the arrival of a traveller coming out of the wilderness, not like the wayworn Israelites when they emerged from its solitudes, but as a beautiful and beloved bride borne in splendour, and escorted by the mighty.—
Note. The Hebrew shows the traveller is a female. C.

Ver. 9. A chariot. Rather, 'a throne,' as the mention of pillars seems to require, and as the word may be translated, 'King Solomon made himself a throne'—the emblem of the King of Zion enthroned in glory, the reward and production of his humiliation unto death, Phil. 2.5-11. C.

Ver. 10. Its inside strewn over with love-mottos (after the manner of the East) by the daughters of Jerusalem, the emblems of those records whereby believers have witnessed Christ's love to them, and their love to Christ. C.

Ver. 11. In the day of his espousals, &c. The church restored to paradise, and uninterrupted communion with Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In this world the clearest days of intimate fellowship with Christ are suddenly turned into nights of desertion, trouble, ignorance, and sloth.
But precious and dear is Jesus to lively saints;—nothing can content them without his presence and favour; and they count no labour nor suffering too hard to obtain it.
Great is his love to them. He is loath to contend long with his people lest their spirit should fail before him.
And an hour, a minute of his presence, richly rewards all their pains and sorrows in seeking for it.
Promising is the appearance when the Word preached pointedly touches the heart and conscience of hearers, and leads them to careful inquiries concerning Christ.
And remarkable fellowship with him effectually animates to an earnest wrestling in behalf of the church and public interests of religion. What extensive honour believers procure to themselves from all around them by an earnest care to maintain fellowship with him, and to follow him in a gracious, upright, and heavenly conversation! But if distinguished saints be so admirable and lovely, how much more is Christ himself and his covenant! With great care ought we to labour to have the heart and eyes of all around us fixed on him:
for great indeed is his love, that he should take pleasure in espousing to himself poor, guilty, polluted, diseased, wretched, and mischievous sinners of mankind.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1-5, 7. Behold how glorious is the state of my church decked with ordinances, officers, and saints! How comely is she when ministers, her lights, or eyes, are intelligent, modest, humble, and holy, walking in all godly simplicity!—when converts, rooted in me as their Head, grow up in grace and perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord—feeding on the rich pastures of my Word, and surrendering themselves acceptable sacrifices to God!—How comely is she when ministers, who prepare spiritual nourishment for others, are sound in their doctrine, holy in their conversation, harmonious and meek in their behaviour, and active and successful in winning souls to me!—when their ministrations mark the soundness of their hearts!—when their dwelling on redemption through my blood, as their principal theme, renders themselves and their ministrations lively and pleasant; and when, with modesty, singleness, prudence, and order they, and other rulers, govern the flocks committed to their care!—when they, as superior to others in station, and as means of connecting them with Christ, and of conveying their spiritual nourishment, are upright, steady, and strong, and do watch over the church, and actively improve the whole armour of God for her defence and honour!—and when her various oracles, ordinances, and officers are remarkably useful for supplying the souls of men with the nourishing milk of God's Word!—But especially how fair and comely are believers, with respect to their personal capacity, when justified by active faith, and adorned with every spiritual grace!—when their spiritual knowledge, faith, and affection are sincere, single, humble, and seasonably discovered!—when their conversation in thought, word, and deed, notwithstanding many imperfections, is orderly and pure, manifesting a heart nourished in the pastures of the gospel!—when, by repeated acts of faith and meditation, they improve their spiritual provision; and their zeal for God is uniform, pure, and moderate, animating them to a fruitfulness in good works, and in winning others to me!—when their prayers and converse are profitable and pleasant, discovering the soundness of their heart, animated, and furnished by, and accepted through my blood!—when there is much secret and holy blushing on account of remaining defects!—when their faith, which unites them to me, furnishes with and really improves the whole armour of God for their defence from spiritual enemies, as the worthies of God formerly experienced!—when, feeding upon the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, they, to my inexpressible pleasure, abound in faith and love towards me, and in care to instruct and edify others!—How completely perfect are they in their justification, in the extent of their sanctification, and in my purpose and favourable acceptance.

6, 8. Till not only the gospel dispensation, but even the glorious millennium, and the resurrection to everlasting life, come, I, according to thy request, ch. 2. 17, will continue to bestow my special presence and influence in my church, which is rendered so delightful by my ordinances, and by the precious graces, prayers, and praises of my people.—Let therefore every one spiritually espoused to me there attend, and hold intimate fellowship with me, setting their affections on things above; forsaking the most excellent creature-satisfactions for my sake, shunning the intimacy of carnal, covetous, and violent men, and even the fellowship of superstitious, erroneous, and persecuting churches.
9, 10. O redeemed soul, partaker of the same human nature with me, begotten and adopted of my Father, and spiritually betrothed to my person, how, even with the weakest acts of thy faith, and the smallest degree of sincere grace and holy obedience, hast thou claimed, attracted, encouraged, and coupled my heart to thee! How incomparably acceptable and delightful is thy love, and that sweet fragrant flowing from thy manifold graces! 11. How delightful thy prayers and praise! Thy instructing, reproofing, and comforting discourse marks what sweet and nourishing truths and experiences are lodged in thy heart, and how delightful and attractive is thy holy and benevolent conversation! 12-14. My church is a delightful garden, separated from the world, set apart to the service of God, digged by gospel ministrations and influences, and especially protected by my providence, by the rules of order contained in my Word, and a medicinal spring of gospel truth hid from the view of a carnal world! And when purged of scandalous persons, her converts planted in the new kingdom do flourish more fragrant, delightful, precious, and useful, more numerous and different in circumstances, than all the fruit-bearing trees and spices of an orchard!—Yea, every particular believer is a garden set apart in beautiful order, and with infinite care and labour, to the service of God; and has in him the Holy Ghost and a principle of grace, as a well of water springing up into everlasting life: and in the most pleasant manner are their various gifts and graces exercised to my honour, their own advantage, and the edification of others.

BELIEVERS. 15. Blessed Jesus! great source and bestower of all life here or hereafter, it is to thy influences alone that we owe all our comeliness, fragrant, and fruitfulness! let them run more abundantly into our hearts, that, by the exercise of thy grace, we may be rendered more useful to water and refresh others around! 16. And since we are thine, as well as under our own care, prevent everything tending to mar our fruitfulness; and let the Holy Ghost, in his convincing and sin-mortifying as well as in his comforting influences, stir up and quicken our hearts to a lively exercise of those gifts and graces with which we are endowed. And do thou, O Jesus, manifest thy presence in thine ordinances, and accept of and delight in those graces and good works which are wrought in us by faith in thyself.

Ver. 1. My love—'my Partner.' 'Thine eyes are doves' (see ch. 1. 15) behind thy veil.—'Thine hair as a flock of goats.'
They must have seen the beautiful hair of some of the Asiatic goats who would appreciate this comparison. C.

Ver. 2. None is barren. 'None is companionless,' an allusion to the correspondence of the upper and lower teeth, upon which both their beauty and utility so much depend.—Note. Personal beauty, like the other gifts of God, is good, and may, if not abused, be used for most gracious purposes. The details of personal beauty form, accordingly, most appropriate emblems of those gifts of the Spirit wherewith Christ adorns the believer and his bride the church. C.

Ver. 4. Reference may here be made not merely to the natural granates, with pleasant fruits; camphire,⁷ with spikenard;

14 Spikenard and saffron; calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense; myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices:

15 A^a fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon.

16 ¶ Awake,⁹ O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden,⁸ that the spices thereof may flow out. Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits.

CHAPTER V.

1 Christ awaketh the church with his calling. 2 The church having a taste of Christ's love is sick of love. 9 A description of Christ by his graces.

I AM^a come into my garden, my sister, my spouse: I have gathered my myrrh with my spice; I have eaten my honey-omb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk: eat,⁴ O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly,¹ O beloved.

2 ¶ I¹ sleep, but my heart waketh: it is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open⁴ to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night.

3 I¹ have put off my coat; how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet; how shall I defile them?

5 I¹ rose up to open to my beloved; and my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet-smelling⁵ myrrh, upon the handles of the lock.

6 I¹ opened to my beloved; but my beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone; my soul failed when he spake: I sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer.

7 The^t watchmen that went about the city found me, they smote me, they wounded me; the keepers of the walls took away my vail from me.

8 I¹ charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him, that I am sick of love.

9 ¶ What^t is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

10 My¹ beloved is white and ruddy,⁷ the chiefest⁸ among ten thousand.

11 His² head is as the most fine gold; his locks are bushy,⁹ and black as a raven;

12 His^b eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and fitly set.¹

13 His^c cheeks are as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers; his lips like lilies, dropping sweet-smelling myrrh:

symmetry and stateliness of the neck; but to the costly chains and ornaments of gold which it was customary to wear in great profusion round the neck. David's armoury tower was graceful in the style of its architecture; and it was hung round with golden shields and polished armour. P.

Ver. 6. The emblem here changes, and the speaker retires to Lebanon, the mountain from which he speaks in ver. 8. The emblem represents Christ inviting the believer (the church) to lofty ascents of contemplation and extended views of providence and redemption. C.

Ver. 9. One of thine eyes. 'One glance of thine eyes,' that language of humility, purity, devotedness—which nothing but the eye can speak. C.

Ver. 11. Lebanon. Whiteness and incense—the one meaning from its snowy top; the other from the fragrant plants that adorned its sides. C.

Ver. 12. 'A garden is inclosed, my sister espoused: a spring is shut up.' This garden, &c., not being the emblem of the bride herself, but of the protected beauties and comforts of her residence. C.—Fountains shut up and sealed, that is, so covered and inclosed as to be secure against all inspection, are not uncommon in Palestine. There is one at Solomon's Pools. It is in an artificial subterranean chamber, the entrance to which is closed, and a subterranean channel conducts its waters into one of the great pools. P.

Ver. 15. A well of living waters. The emblem of the Word of Christ springing up continually in streams of life from the believer's heart and gospel ordinances, Jn. 4.14.—Streams from Lebanon. The emblem of the 'good and perfect gifts that come down from the Father of lights,' Ja. 1.17. C.—Perennial streams are very rare in Palestine, but they abound in Lebanon. Their waters are limpid, sparkling, and of icy coldness. The streams and fountains of Lebanon are proverbial throughout Syria as emblems of luxury and pleasure. P.

REFLECTIONS.—What infinite love Jesus bears to all people! He puts upon them his own comeliness, when they exercise a living faith in him. Earnest is his desire of their company: and soon shall they be with him where he is, to share his happiness and honour! Never, but when he went to suffer, did he say, Let these go their way. They are a good savour of Christ to all around or above them. And when they rightly behold their own comeliness in him, it effectually humbles them, and makes them ascribe all the glory to him, and to cry for more abundant supplies of his sanctifying influences. Surely it is the greatest honour for them, as his peculiar property, to keep themselves entirely for his service.

CHAPTER V. CHRIST. I. At thy request, believing soul, I vouchsafe my special presence in my church and ordinances. I have with pleasure observed thy lively preaching, and cordial application of my precious and soul-nourishing truths. I have particularly observed and accepted the graces and services of believers. Let them also feast abundantly on my gospel provision, and take the comfort of their graces and works, as evidences of their faith and great salvation.

BELIEVERS. 2. Alas! the dull and lukewarm frame in which Jesus often finds his churches when he comes to bless them! And how slothful and secure my animal nature had made me, even while my spiritual endeavoured to hear and entertain him! Amidst much deadness and unconcern, I felt some impressions made upon my heart by his Word, Spirit, and rod; while he, in the kindest manner, besought me to exercise my faith and love, and to remove whatever hindered his most intimate approaches, as he was closely related to me, had suffered much for me and from me, had waited long for my opening to him, and was much grieved with my neglect of him! 3. In the most pitiful manner I evaded compliance with his kind invitations, as a thing I was not at present fitted for, and which I could not do without crossing my corrupt inclinations and troubling my flesh. 4. By the immediate power of his Spirit, Jesus touched my heart through his Word, and kindly stirred up my affections to a concern for my former slighting of him, and to an earnest desire after his presence. 5. Repenting of my former stupidity and indifference, and actuated by his influence, I prepared myself to entertain his visit; my faith and other graces put themselves into active and vigorous motion for the removal of everything that tended to hinder his access to my soul. 6. Notwithstanding my vigorous actings of faith upon his self-giving promises, and panting desires after him, I did not obtain any sensible manifestations of his presence. My heart was then filled with pain, grief, and shame at the remembrance of his slighted invitation. I carefully attended his ordinances, public and private, in order to seek and find him: but met with nothing but frowns and disappointments. 7. When ministers touched my case in their discourses, they but raised my hopes and increased my anguish: by their harsh reproofs, calumnies, and persecutions, they wounded and distressed my soul. They whose duty it is to prevent everything tending to disturb the peace and edification of the church questioned the truth of my profession, and charged me with the vilest hypocrisy. 8. O! my fellow-professors, I beg and charge you, that if this my Lord Jesus allow you any sensible intimacy with himself, you will represent to him the distressed case of my soul, and entreat him speedily to visit me, who earnestly desires him, and am at the point of death for want of his sensible presence.

DAUGHTERS. 9. Distressed, but precious and lovely saint, what means this so solemn charge? What singular and transcendent excellency is in this Jesus, the beloved of thy heart?

BELIEVERS. 10. Boundless and incomparable is his excellency! A glorious Godhead and a suffering manhood, a holiness of heart and life, and a bloody suffering, a glorious exaltation, and a humble debasement, mercy towards his people, and judgment against unbelievers, concur to render him in every respect a miracle of beauty! He is infinitely more dignified, kind, rich, and glorious, than all the ten thousands of created beings in heaven and in earth; and, as the great standard-bearer, he goes forth, attended by angels and saints, conquering and to conquer. 11. In his divine nature, and as he is the Head of government and influence to all people, he is pure, precious, substantial, glorious, useful, enriching, and unchangeable! Lasting and immutable is his comeliness! Beautiful, mysterious, and majestic are his well-connected purposes and providences! And ever fresh and comely those societies of saints which are rooted and grounded in him! 12. Pure, penetrating, pleasant, beautiful, and comforting is his all-seeing knowledge and his tender pity and care! 13. Delightful the manifestations of his love, glory, and grace! His words are gracious and comfortable, continually refreshing, quickening, and supporting to the souls of his people! 14. Perfect, glorious, and lasting, and all managed with infinite skill, are his munificent liberality, almighty power, and marvellous works, particularly of grace! Sincere, lasting, and wisely ordered for the good of all people, are his great purposes of love, his tender bowels of mercy and compassion, and his sympathizing intercession! 15. Sufficient and wisely exerted are his strength and power to bear or act in the work of our redemption!

14 His^a hands are as gold rings set with the beryl; ^bhis belly is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires:

15 His^b legs are as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold; ^chis countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars:

16 His^c mouth is most sweet; ^dyea, he is altogether lovely.^d This^d is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

13 Return,^h return, O Shulamite; return,

Skilfully contrived, and firmly fixed on the precious and durable foundations of his grace, are the dispensations of his providence! Elevated, stately and pleasant, always verdant and refreshing, is the full manifestation of him in all his excellencies! 16. Pleasant is his Word and the sensible communications of his love! Nay, all that is in his person, offices, relations, names, blessings, and ordinances is inexpressibly desirable; and nothing is truly desirable but as in or connected with him. This, this, O fellow-professors, is my spiritual husband, and my constant and sympathizing lover and benefactor.

Ver. 1. This verse complies with the closing invitation of the preceding chapter, and represents Christ delighting in the feast of his church, and inviting all that follow him to participate in his joy, Jn. 3. 29. C.

Ver. 2. Open to me, my sister. The emblem of our Lord standing at the door and knocking, and waiting for the opening of the closed door, Re. 3. 20. C.

Ver. 3. Two excuses easy to be understood by those who observe that it is not Christ personal but Christ representative that now knocks for admission, see Mat. 25. 40, 45. And when the hungry, the thirsty, the naked, the stranger, and the imprisoned have knocked and called, how few will be able to plead that they have never hesitated to rise, and never invented a plausible excuse for neglecting to open the door! C.

Ver. 7. The watchmen that, by their faithful preaching of the truth, found out (detected) the lately negligent, but now aroused and anxious seeker; they smote, they wounded the conscience, and they took away the veil of every plausible excuse. C.

Ver. 16. He is altogether lovely. Independent of his inspiration and its emblematic object, this description must present to the eye of an unprejudiced artist an imagery of most unequalled range, the product of a mind fraught with universal information. Its chief topics of comparison are (1) Colours; (2) Officered armies, ver. 10; (3) Precious metal; (4) Ornithology, ver. 11, 12; (5) Botany, ver. 13; (6) Jewelry, ver. 14; (7) Architecture; (8) Landscape, ver. 15; (9) Attractive eloquence, ver. 16. Every province of nature and art thus furnishing its tribute to the King, the 'Lord of all!' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Quickly, when entreated, does Jesus come to comfort the hearts and supply the wants of his people; and brings with him for their refreshment the fulness of promises, grace, and joy. Enlarged appetites after spiritual blessings are necessary for gospel hearers. But it is strange that even saints should refuse his gracious visits, for which they had earnestly prayed and patiently waited. Hard is the heart that remains untouched by his affectionate calls; base is the temper which renders men careless about him and his influences; and shameful and frivolous are the best excuses which can be made for evading his visits. It is indeed impossible for people wholly to exclude him from their heart; and they procure for themselves great grief and toil by neglecting to entertain his offered kindness. But it is base for ministers to act imprudently and untenderly towards those whose spirits the Lord has wounded. More dutiful and profitable is it to strive in prayers for one another. And how pleasant when, even under desertion, saints maintain the most exalted view of Jesus' person and fullness, and the most assured faith of their interest in them; and when even curious inquiries concerning him draw forth the warmest commendations of him!

CHAPTER VI. DAUGHTERS. 1. Precious saint, tell us where we may hope to find this thy beloved Saviour, that we may, after thy example, and in holy fellowship with thee, more heartily than ever seek him.

BELIEVERS. 2. Jesus, my beloved, is always present in his church, and is especially conversant in those assemblies where the graces of the people are most eminent; taking pleasure in and increasing their grace and comforts, and delighting to convert, and afterwards glorify, all who accept him. 3. And notwithstanding all my miscarriages, the mutual relation between him and me is as full and firm as ever; and he still delights himself in the assemblies of his people.

CHRIST. 4. In respect of oracles, ordinances, officers, and order, thou, my church, art extremely beautiful in my view, and terrible to enemies around. And in respect to real righteousness, glorious grace, and holy conversation, thou, O particular believer, art transcendently comely, and thy assured faith and fervent prayer overcome every opponent. 5-7. Such was my delight in the vigorous actings of thy faith and love, and in thy importunate prayers, that I could no longer absent myself; and being returned, I assure thee, for thy comfort, that thy holy thoughts and gracious exercise, thy unfeigned and operative faith, thy spiritual meditations, thy regular and active zeal, thy humility and self-abasement, together with all thy privileges, and everything belonging to my church, are as precious and comely as ever. 8, 9. Whatever beauties there be in earthly courts, there are none comparable to a true saint. In the one true church, nay, in one heavenly-begotten soul, there is more real comeliness than in all the world beside; all those of principal esteem, in either church or state, are disposed to express their approbation of it. 10. Gradual was the increasing light and glory of the church in her patriarchal, ceremonial, and gospel periods. Gradual and diversified is the growing comeliness and glory of every believer who truly turns to the light: they shine as the morning light, going on to perfection. In their borrowed and imperfect holiness they show fair as the moon; and in their genuine righteousness shine clear as the meridian sun; and, armed with the whole armour of God, they are terrible to every oppressor. 11. Such is my regard to my church that, even while absent from thee, I was occupied among my outwardly mean but inwardly glorious and hidden ones, carefully observing if her fruitfulness in saints and in good works was answerable to her new-covenant soil, and how her various members did thrive in the advanced progress or weak beginnings of grace. 12. And thy vigorous actings of faith and fervent supplications took such hold of me, that I was constrained, as in a surprising transport of affection, speedily to return to thee in loving-kindness and in tender mercies. 13. Notwithstanding every former offence, return, therefore, my perfect and peaceable one, by faith and repentance, to thy wonted familiarity with me, that I and my Father, and blessed Spirit, and ministering angels may, with pleasure and satisfaction, behold thy beauties. However mean and worthless thou art in thy own eyes, yet how pleasant is it for me to behold Jews and Gentiles united into one society of saints, and to contemplate heavenly graces and holy duties withstanding and conquering the remains of inward corruptions, temptations, and fears!

Ver. 1. O thou fairest. This character of superlative female beauty, like the panegyric on male beauty, ch. 5. 10, &c., should have led every expositor to see that the book was never intended for any daughter of Eve; to any one of whom it had been the grossest flattery, alike degrading to the deceiving utterer and the credulous listener. But how literal the description when applied to her who is adorned by the Spirit with 'the beauty of holiness!' C.

Ver. 5. Turn away thine eyes. That is, thine eyes suffused with tears from seeking and suffering, ch. 5. 6, 7; see Ps. 116. 8. C.

Ver. 8. This is no enumeration of Solomon's family establishment, as it does not accord with the account in 1 Ki. 11. 3. It is an emblematic classification of the church, in which queens, concubines, and virgins are exactly equivalent to the triple classification, 1 Jn. 2. 12-14, fathers, young men, children. C.

Ver. 9. That is, the church in its progressive, tripartite condition on earth, saw and praised the church in its glorified and perfected condition in heaven, as the most wondrous monument of the wisdom and grace of its Lord. C.

Ver. 11. The speaker in the first person from ver. 4 has been the bridegroom; and after the question, ver. 10, he resumes ver. 11. This must be the key, ver. 12, in which, not the bride, but the bridegroom speaks, saying, 'or ever I was aware'—before I had time for farther inquiry—'my soul, my strong affection, set me on the chariots of my willing people'—the people promised to Christ 'in the day of his power,' Ps. 110. 3, and whom 'the love of Christ constraineth' (carries along with him) to judge and live, 2 Co. 5. 14. C.

Ver. 13. Shulamite. The Hebrew feminine of Solomon; 'the peaceful and the perfect.'—The company of two armies. The word Mahanaim is applied to the two bands into which Jacob divided his family, also to the two hosts of angels that he saw, Ge. xxxii.; and may well represent the two bands of Jews and Gentiles in the church, Jn. 10. 16, and the correspondent 'ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' He. 1. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The believer's hearty commendations of Christ are glorious, when blessed by him, to return, that we may look upon thee. What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies.⁹

make others inquire after him. And it is prudent for deserted saints frequently and boldly to recognize the mutual relation betwixt Christ and their soul. Great is the mercy that, though he often for a time deserts a particular child, he never totally forsakes his church and ordinances, and often does much good while it is little perceived. How sweet and often surprising are the returns of his sensible presence! For unchangeable is his esteem of, love to, desire after, and delight in all people amidst all the changes of his countenance and providence. Engaging, honourable, and awful are the beauties of holiness when they shine in churches, ordinances, and saints. And unbounded is Jesus' care about all people, and to have them fruitful in graces and good works. He daily seeks to return them his sensible favours, and to see them cordially united among themselves, and valiantly contending with their spiritual enemies.

CHAPTER VII. 1-6. Thou, O my visible church, art adorned with ministers shod with the animating preparations of the gospel of peace;—ministers fixed in the most noted station, and contributing to thy inward health and fruitfulness;—strong in grace, and confirmed in the truth, and set for the defence of the gospel;—intelligent in the mystery of Christ, and sagaciously watching against thy spiritual foes.—Thou art also adorned with manifold oracles and ordinances, for the spread of my honour, the communication of my influences, and edification of my people.—How beautiful, O heaven-born soul, are thy affections and conversation, through the powerful influence of gospel truth! Glorious are thy inward principles of holiness, and first motions to good, wrought in thee by the Holy Ghost! Thy gracious desires are supplied with nourishing influences from above! Plentiful provision, and fruitfulness in holiness, is obtained by the digesting of my word in a particular application of it! Living on the breasts of inspired oracles and instituted ordinances, how glorious and attracting are the exercises of thy faith and love, and of thy holy endeavours to edify others! A sure and precious defence is thy unfeigned and vigorous faith! Clear and distinct is thy spiritual understanding in the matters of God! Wonderful is thy gracious sagacity in discovering truth, and discerning between good and evil: and attended with courage and watchfulness, especially against the most near, constant, and malicious enemies! Grounded in my blood, and effectually productive of good works, is thy towering hope supported by thy faith! And acceptable in me is even the very smallest part of thy holy principles or practices! 7. So affecting is thy beauty, bestowed by myself, that I cannot but regard thy fellowship, and take pleasure to look on, and abundantly delight in thee.—When the whole of thy graces and holy conversation is considered in connection, how comely, flourishing, victorious, and heavenly is the appearance! And how cordial and cheering to me are thy affection and kind entertainment; 8, 9. In my purpose I resolved, and in my promise I have sought, to manifest myself to my church, in converting nominal members, and vouchsafing my kindest fellowship to real saints.—This shall qualify thee to edify others, and give pleasure and satisfaction to me. Revived, refreshed, and comforted, by my influences, thy gracious discourse shall quicken and awaken others to taste of my love, and to open their mouths in my praise.

BELIEVERS. 10. O the inexpressible comfort which I enjoy in the faith of Jesus' relations, and in the intimations of his love to my soul! 11, 12. Beloved Redeemer and husband, let me, retiring from the hurry and cares of this present world, have the most ravishing and permanent fellowship with thee! Let me, without delay, not only have a deep concern for the spiritual prosperity of the church, but have an intimate and distinct knowledge of the condition of my own heart, and see whether my graces be weak or strong, flourishing or languishing. In this our retired communion will I discover the sincerity and fervency of my affection to thee. 13. While the precious, savoury, and medicinal truths of the gospel are to many a savour of life unto life; and while lively believers all around me begin to flourish and spread their heavenly influence; the inward graces of my heart show themselves in lively exercises; and everywhere new degrees of grace, and new acts of holiness, are added to the former: all which are, at thy command, set apart for promoting thine honour and service!

Ver. 1. Shoes. The shoes or sandals are noticed first, as the emblem of 'the feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace,' Ep. 6.15.—The joints of thy thighs, &c. 'The mouldings of thy limbs are as ornaments, the workmanship of a skilful hand.' C.

Ver. 4. Heshbon was the capital of Sihon; and amidst its ruins a beautiful pool of water still exists. But is not the meaning of the emblem to be found rather in the meaning of the words, which abides, than in any work of art that might soon be destroyed? Heshbon signifies thought; Bath-rabbim, the house of the mighty; that is, 'Thine eyes are pools (bright depths) of intelligence and power.' C.

Ver. 5. 'Thy braided hair is like the royal purple festooned around the ceilings.'—Note. The word here translated galleries is also (ch. 1.17) translated rafters; it has also been translated singlets. The precise meaning of the word is uncertain; but, from its relation to beams (ch. 1.17), and the fact that eastern ceilings are generally of boards, it has here been rendered ceilings. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Extensive are the beauties of holiness in the church and people of God, and fixed and uniform in the substantial thereof. What delight Jesus takes in the persons and services of his followers! He is ready to hold the most intimate fellowship with them. And with ravishing pleasure they glory in him, and in his love towards them. When inwardly warmed by his love, how ready are they to relinquish everything else, in order to have familiar intercourse with him! And a deep concern for the church of Christ, and exact observation of our inward condition, effectually promotes our endeavours to honour him.

CHAPTER VIII. BELIEVERS. 1. Blessed Redeemer, O that that happy period were come, in which thou shalt assume our nature, and be a member of our visible church, and, in consequence thereof, admit us to the most intimate fellowship with thee! Then, without regard to reproach or persecution, should I openly profess my reverence, subjection, and affection to thee. 2. Instructed by thy Spirit, I should spread abroad the knowledge of thee in the extended gospel church, and all my gifts and graces should be employed to serve and glorify thee. 3. O the infinitely transporting, the intimate, the endearing, the strengthening and supporting fellowship that I should enjoy with thee! Nay, already the believing views of it fill my soul with the joys of my Lord! 4. Let me therefore once more charge you, my fellow-professors, to do everything in your power to continue this my delightful communion with Jesus Christ, and do nothing to interrupt it.

DAUGHTERS. 5. What admirable person is this, who, forsaking all worldly things for Christ, and delivered from her distressed condition, mounts up heavenward, by faith resting on him to bear her up under every burden, and forward through every duty and difficulty?

BELIEVERS. O Jesus, animated by thy own delightful influence, I have, by importunate prayers, obtained the most sensible manifestations of thy love; as others, in whose hearts thou art formed by faith, have also done. 6, 7. O let thy most endeared esteem, remembrance, and love of my soul, appear remarkably in all thy dispensations towards me: for so vehement and irresistible is my desire after intimate fellowship with thee, that nothing else can afford me satisfaction: no, not death and the grave are so dreadful to me as the fears of thy withdrawal! Kindled by thy love shed abroad in my heart, my love to thee melts all my inward powers, and burns up my corruptions. No affliction, temptation, desertion, or persecution can extinguish or abate it. Would the richest on earth tempt me from thee, with all his wealth, nay, with ten thousand worlds, I would utterly condemn and abhor the proposal. 8. But, Lord, we have many fellow-sinners, whom thou didst die for; particularly among the Gentiles, who enjoy no ordinances, and are yet unripe for their spiritual marriage, being destitute of faith and love; what shall we do to promote their conversion, when the offers of thy grace shall be made to them?

CHRIST. 9. When, according to my unchangeable purpose, they shall accept me as their foundation, I and my Father and blessed Spirit will endow them with manifold gifts and graces, and render them, in their hearts and church state, a firm tower and beautiful temple and palace for God. When the door of access to me shall be opened to them in the gospel, and the door of their heart opened to receive me, we, notwithstanding their insignificance, weakness, troubles, and temptations, will thoroughly beautify, strengthen, and protect them.

BELIEVERS. 10. Indeed, blessed Redeemer, by thy infinite favour, I have been united to thee, and stand firm on thee as my foundation, and am come to some maturity and perfection in grace. 11. Thou, Lord Jesus, the infinitely wise and wealthy Prince of Peace, hast secured by thy blood, planted and purified by thy grace, sown with thy Word, and protected and managed by thy providence, the large vineyard of thy church. This thou hast committed to the care of thy gospel ministers, that they, by instructions, warnings, reproofs, and censures, might endeavour to their utmost to render the members fruitful in the works of righteousness, to thy praise and glory. 12. And, while the whole concerns of it are under thy special care, I have in charge the vineyard of my own heart, to watch over, defend, purge, and render fruitful in holy habits and exercises. Thou, Jesus, must have the principal honour of all that I am, have, or can attain to, and thy faithful ministers their subordinate share of my love and regard.

CHRIST. 13. Believing soul, who lovest and frequentest the assemblies of my people, and ordinances there dispensed, thy fellow-members regard and listen to thy instructions and warnings for their edification. Let me, when withdrawn from thee, particularly in my bodily presence, often hear thy prayers and praises, and the publication of my gospel in the world.

BELIEVERS. 14. And, O my blessed Husband and Saviour, not only maintain frequent and familiar intercourse with my soul, and with thy church on earth, in the instituted ordinances of thy worship, but hasten, hasten thy glorious appearance without sin unto our salvation;—when we shall be caught up to meet thee in the air, and shall, in one complete body, enter that happy, that eternal state, in which God shall be ALL in ALL.

Ver. 2. I would cause thee, &c. 'Thou shouldst accustom me to give thee spiced wine, with the juice of pomegranates.' C.

Ver. 5. I raised thee up. I revived thee, when left a helpless infant under the citron-tree. See Eze. 16.4-8. In this reply the BELOVED speaks. C.

Ver. 6. For love is strong. 'Yea, love is strong,' &c. This is the reply of the Beloved who supports.—Jealousy, 'burning love'—cruel, rather, 'inexorable'—vehement flame, rather, 'the dissolving fire of Jehovah.' C.

Ver. 8. The grammar of the passage suggests that the 'daughters of Jerusalem,' who speak (ch. 1-v.), who are still present (ch. 8.4), are here the solicitous projectors for the welfare of the 'little sister.' This emblem has been expounded of the Gentile church—but it seems much more natural to understand by it such as are yet 'weak in the faith,' Ro. 14.1; 15.1; 1 Co. 3.2; Ep. 4.13. C.

Ver. 10. This has generally been considered as the answer of the 'little sister,' exemplifying full and instantaneous 'growth in grace.' But as the grammar will not warrant any change from the speaker in the first person (ver. 1, 2, 4) and the speaker in the first person (ver. 10), this must be understood as the language of the bride, encouraging the 'little sister' by her own experience of grace and attainments in faith. C.

Ver. 11. Baal-hamon, ruler of multitudes.—The keepers represent the rulers and instructors of the churches in their multitudes.—A thousand. As the annual rent for a vine seems to have been ordinarily a piece of silver, Is. 7.23, the emblem indicates that return of 'fruit of the Spirit,' Ga. 5.22, which is ever due in correspondence to privileges. C.

Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens. It is impossible by the grammar to distinguish the speaker in ver. 13 from the speaker in ver. 14; and as in ver. 14 she calls to the listener, my Beloved, the speaker is the bride calling to her Redeemer, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus!' Re. 22.17, 20. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How kind, how marvellous is it, that God's only begotten Son, the brightness of his glory, has, by his assumption of our nature, become our brother, and will for ever continue bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh! And great is the mercy, that to him the gathering of the Gentiles hath and shall be! It is pleasant to remember past experiences of his love in the assured expectations of others still more sweet! And delightful is the frame, ardent the desires, and fervent the prayers, when a soul is overwhelmed with the consolations of Christ! Importunate intercession for the spiritual welfare of others often produces remarkable fellowship with him. Extensive revenues of holy thoughts, words, and deeds are due from every member of the church to Jesus Christ. And they who give him his due, will give his ministers theirs. But how strongly Christ and his people's hearts must be knit one to another! They cannot live but as it were in mutual intercourse. Soon will he come to take them to himself in glory; and, in the believing view of it, their waiting spirits cry, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus.'

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

Three points present themselves to the Christian reader and student in the preceding book:—

I. Was this book received into the canon of Holy Scripture, and sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles? To this there can be but one answer—it was.

II. Are there, in the New Testament, any such evident references as form a key to its interpretation? Such evident references may be found, Mat. 21.33, when comp. with Song 8.11; Ep. 5.27, comp. with Song 4.1, 7; Ep. 6.15, comp. with Song 7.1; Re. 3.20, comp. with Song 5.2. Other references have been suggested, but these are so evident as not to admit of question.

III. Are there such quotations of passages of Scripture parallel to or identical with the Song of Solomon, by which its spiritual import can be unquestionably established? The answer to this question is easy and direct. (1) By referring to

He. 1.8 there is found a direct address from God the Father to God the Son. (2) That address is quoted from Ps. 45.6. (3) It is impossible to overlook the complete parallelism, nay identity, of that psalm with the scenery and character of the Song of Solomon. Therefore, by following the scriptural plan—comparing spiritual with spiritual, and the natural law of all interpretation—rising from what is plainly stated, granted, or ascertained, to what is less plain, questioned, or yet unknown, there can be no difficulty in coming to the conclusion, that the Song of Solomon forms a succession of emblems whereby the mutual love and union between Christ and his church are described for the instruction and comfort of believers.

That the Song of Solomon is capable of ready and great perversion, by 'men of corrupt minds,' is undoubted. For, whilst 'to the pure all things are pure,' so to the impure all things are impure. And such is the state of the carnal mind, that just in proportion as any object is good, in like proportion may it be perverted to purposes of evil. Thus—just in proportion as a medicine is powerful to restore, may its improper administration render it powerful to destroy. And thus grace, in its every form, may be turned into licentiousness. But is the sufferer, therefore, to be deprived of a powerful medicine?—or is the physician who discovered and prescribed it to be pronounced an evil-doer? Is the sinner, therefore, to be deprived of access to pardon; and the God of all grace and consolation to be disrobed of his attribute of mercy? No. And neither is the church of God to be deprived of some of the brightest pages in the divine Word, because eyes that have 'loved darkness' cannot perceive their beauties.

To those who have observed what a prominent place love to Jesus holds in the New Testament (see for example, Jn. 14. 23; 1 Co. 16. 22; 2 Co. 5. 14), and to those who have experienced and rejoiced in 'the assurance' of that love—the Song of Solomon will ever furnish a subject of study, at once most delightful and profitable.—C.

The various modes of interpreting this remarkable and extremely difficult book may be classified under three heads:—The Literal, the Typical, and the Allegorical.

1. The Literal makes the book a simple story related in the form of a dramatic poem. The facts of the story are given by Dr. Ginsburg as follows:—“A village girl, the daughter of a widowed mother of Shulam, is betrothed to a young shepherd, whom she met whilst tending the flock. Fearing lest the frequent meetings of these lovers should be the occasion of scandal, the brothers of the Shulamite employ her in the vineyard on the farm. Whilst on the way to this vineyard she one day falls in with the cortège of King Solomon, who is on a spring visit to the country. Struck with her beauty the king captures her, conveys her to his royal pavilion, then conducts her to Jerusalem in great pomp, in the hope of dazzling and overcoming her with his splendour, and eventually lodges her in his harem. But all is in vain. True to her virtuous love, she resists all the allurements of the exalted sovereign, spurns all his promises to elevate her to the highest rank, and in the midst of the gay scenes assures her humble shepherd, who followed her to the capital, that her affections are sacredly and inviolably pledged to him. Solomon, convinced at last that all his advances are in vain, allows her to quit the royal residence. Hand in hand the two faithful lovers return to her native place, and on their way home visit the tree under which their love-spark was first kindled, and there renew their vows of constancy and fidelity. On their arrival they are welcomed by their companion shepherds, and she is rewarded by her brothers for her exemplary virtue.” It is said that the object or moral of this charming story is ‘to teach a lesson of practical righteousness by the record of an extraordinary example of virtue in a young maiden in humble life who encountered and conquered the greatest temptations from the most exalted personage in the land.’ The theory is attractive, and the arguments employed in defence of it are not without weight; but I think the thoughtful student of God’s Word, and especially such as have studied the genius of oriental poetry and imagery, will see that there is something higher and nobler in this book, than such a moral lesson. And, besides, I cannot see that the various parts of the book can be made at all to harmonize with such a simple and detailed story. In my mind the imagery is too sublime, the descriptions of far too elevated a character, to be applied even by an eastern poet to any mere narrative of real life.

2. The Typical theory of interpretation adopts as a basis the historical truth of the narrative, making the bride either Pharaoh’s daughter, or some maiden of Palestine, whom Solomon had loved and married; but then this bride typified the church, and Solomon typified Christ, while the whole story was designed to represent in prophetic imagery the love subsisting between Christ and his church—a love mutual, indissoluble, and eternal. The great difficulty in the way of this theory is to establish the historical character of the narrative. A type must be a fact; and the narrative here has all the characteristics of ideality as distinguished from reality. No writer, however poetical, would describe ordinary events in such language as is employed in ch. 2. 1-4, 14; 6. 10-12; and no writer, even in the East, would put such language in the mouth of a virtuous maiden as we find in ch. i. ii. viii.

3. The Allegorical interpretation of the book seems to me to be the only possible and true one. The poem is conceived in the loftiest style of eastern imagery. Incidents of real life, events of everyday occurrence, customs which still prevail in the East form a groundwork, but they are all idealized and spiritualized, so that they may more strikingly exhibit to the pure and spiritual mind, grand divine truths. The leading image is common in Scripture. Human love in its purest and holiest type—that of husband and wife—is the symbol of the love of Christ and his church, of God and his people. Thus Isaiah says, ‘Thy Maker is thine husband: the Lord of hosts is his name,’ ch. 54. 5; and still more clearly: ‘For thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and the land shall be married. . . . As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee,’ ch. 62. 4, 5. The forty-fifth Psalm greatly resembles this book in style and imagery. So also the same imagery is common in the New Testament: ‘I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ,’ 2 Co. 11. 2. The whole bearing and force of that beautiful passage in Ep. 5. 22-33 rest upon this same figure. The apostle John too, in the last book of the Sacred Canon, appears to embody the very idea of the Song of Solomon, when he records his glorious vision: ‘And I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.’

This is substantially the system of interpretation which was adopted generally by the Jews, and is developed in the Talmud. By them, of course, God is represented as the Beloved, and the people of Israel the loved one. In the early Christian church, the same view was taken, and was held almost universally until impugned by Erasmus. It appears to me to be in accordance with the analogy of Scripture, and with the genius of eastern poetry. The whole structure of the composition, too, discursive, yet having a subjective coherence, tends to the same conclusion. There is in it no sustained plot, no crisis of a story. It consists of expressions of most devoted affection, with reference to localities and ever-changing scenery, all adapted to call forth new emotions, and to exhibit unalterable love. Viewed in this light, interpreted in this manner, it is one of the purest and noblest portions of Holy Writ. It lifts the mind into an ideal world of spiritual communion with God in Christ. It shows us his tenderness, his watchful care, his devoted unceasing attachment to his people in all their waywardness, temptations, sorrows, and persecutions, such as we can see nowhere else. It shows us that friends and kindred—the nearest and dearest, may desert us in the hour of trial, but God will not and cannot, for love binds him to us and us to him by a tie that is indissoluble.

Yet, still, holy, pure, and comforting as this book is to the man whose nature the Spirit of God has mastered, the profitable reading of it by the ordinary Christian is confessedly difficult. Each one knows his own heart, and can best review his own feelings. But in this western land, where we are not accustomed to the gorgeousness of eastern imagery, or the nature of eastern life and manners, we need watchfulness, prayer, and a heart completely under the control of the sanctifying Spirit, if we would derive from this book those noble lessons which God intended it to embody and impart.

It is sometimes said that the Song of Solomon is not quoted or referred to in the New Testament, and that therefore it cannot have that high spiritual significance which I have above advocated. In reply I quote the words of Hengstenberg:—‘The New Testament is pervaded by references to the Song of Songs, and all of them are based on the supposition that it is to be interpreted spiritually. Proportionally no book of the Old Testament is so frequently referred to, implicitly or explicitly, in the New Testament, as this one; and we cannot but be surprised at the superficiality or the prejudices of those who have asserted that the Song of Songs is never quoted in the New Testament.’ The following passages afford ample proof that its language and spirit were constantly before the mind of our Lord and his apostles, Mat. 6. 28-30; 13. 25; 24. 42, 21. 33; 26. 6-13; Mar. 14. 3; Lu. 12. 35-37; 13. 31, 32; 7. 38; Jn. 6. 44; 7. 33, 34, 12. 3; 21. 16; 3. 29; 2. 1-11; Ep. 5. 27.—P.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH,

Who continued prophesying about sixty years with small success, ch. 1. 1; 53. 1. He was not the most ancient of the sixteen prophets; but his predictions, containing so much of Christ in them, are now placed first in order. The first thirty-nine chapters, except iv. xi. xii. xxvi. xxxii. xxxv. consist chiefly of divine indictments for sins and denunciations of judgments; the last twenty-seven, of promises relative to the deliverance from Babylon and to the gospel church. In ch. i.-iii. v. vii.-ix. xxii. xxiv. xxvii. 7-11; xxviii.-xxx. 1-17; xxxi. 1-3; lix. lxx. lxxi. is represented the ingratitude, unfruitfulness, idolatry, profaneness, female pride, oppression, drunkenness, perversion of judgment, &c., of the Hebrews; and the terrible punishments thereof by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Romans, &c., are predicted. In ch. vii. 5-9; viii. 4, 21, 22; ix. 8-21; xvii. is predicted the ruin of the kingdom of Syria and Israel, and the calamities of the Philistines, xiv. 29-31; of the Moabites, xv. xvi.; xxv. 10; of the Egyptians and Ethiopians, xviii.-xx.; of the Arabians, xxi. 13-17; of the Edomites, xxi. 11, 12; xxxiv.; of the Tyrians, xxxiii.; of the Assyrian army under Sennacherib, x. xiv. 24-27; xvii. 12-14; xxvii. 1; xxix. 5-8; xxx. 27-33; xxxi. 4-9; xxxiii., which is accomplished, xxxvi. xxxvii.; of the Chaldeans, xiii. xiv.; xxi. 1-10; xliii. 10; xlv. 1-4; xlvii. 1, 2, 11; xlviii. With those charges of guilt and predictions of judgments are intermingled many precious promises of the redemption and glorious kingdom of the Messiah; as i. 18, 25, 27; ii. 2-5; iv. 2-6; vii. 14; viii. 14; ix. 6, 7; xi. xii. xxv.-xxviii. 16. From xl. to the end, the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon and the vanity of idols are frequently hinted; but the incarnation, service, and glory of the Messiah, the erection of the gospel church, the calling of the Gentiles, the rejection and future restoration of the Jews, are the principal subjects. And on account of his clear and striking representations of Jesus Christ and his blessings, and of the gospel church, this prophet has been frequently styled a fifth evangelist.

[Isaiah, if not the first of the noble band of Old Testament prophets, yet belonged to the first cycle or group. His writings were commenced in the reign of Uzziah, B.C. 808-757, and were continued during the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and down to the close of the reign of Hezekiah, B.C. 698. From the commencement of his prophecies to the close must thus have been more than half a century. He was a contemporary of Hosea, Joel, Amos, Jonah, and Micah. Nothing certain is known of his genealogy or his private life. From his dress, which appears to have resembled that of Elijah, it might perhaps be concluded that he belonged to one of the transjordanic tribes, ch. 20. 2, or to some remote village in the wilderness of Judah. He resided, however, during his public ministry, in Jerusalem, and near the temple; and he appears to have been held in the highest respect by the princes of the land, and to have exercised much influence in the affairs of the nation. In sublimity of style, purity of diction, and clearness of prophetic delineation of the person, character, and work of the Messiah, Isaiah stands pre-eminent among Old Testament writers. He has been truly called the 'evangelical prophet.' P.]

* In reading this and the subsequent prophets, great attention must be paid to rule x. in chap. ii. of the Introduction, relative to the fulfilment of the same prophecy in different periods; and to history of nations in chap. iv.

CHAPTER I.

1 Isaiah complaineth of Judah for her rebellion. 5 He lamenteth her judgments. 10 He upbraiddeth their whole service, 16 and exhorteth to repentance. 21 He bewaileth their wickedness. 25 He promiseth grace, 28 and threateneth destruction to the wicked.

THE vision^a of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he ^bsaw concerning Judah and Jerusalem in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah.

2 Hear,^d O heavens; and give ear, O earth; for the LORD hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Ye heavens and earth, and all that dwell therein, with astonishment know and bear witness that I have marvellously raised up, privileged, preserved, protected, and advanced this Jewish nation; and yet they have, on occasions and in ways unnumbered, perfidiously violated my covenant, and rebelled against my commandments. 3. Brutishly ignorant and inconsiderate of everything important, they scarcely pay me and my ordinances the regard that cattle do to their owners and their stables. 4. Alas! the whole nation is polluted with, and guilty of, the most shocking and multiplied abominations! Unlike to their pious ancestors, they tread in the wicked steps of their immediate parents: they wax worse and worse themselves, and labour to render their posterity still more and more wicked. Revolving more and more from the service and worship of JEHOVAH their God, they have provoked his fearful indignation against themselves. 5. Further punishment of their sin with temporal calamities would but render them still more outrageous and obstinate in wickedness. Already corruption hath infected all ranks, the rulers and the ruled, without any proper means used to prevent it; and misery and distress have overwhelmed the whole nation. 7-9. The Israelites, Syrians, Assyrians, or others, have already, by fire and sword, desolated the whole country of Judah; and Jerusalem alone remains, and that in great danger and distress: and were it not from regard to a few righteous persons still left among us, the whole nation had been utterly destroyed by God in accordance with just law. 10-15. Be therefore assured, saith God, ye detestable monsters of wickedness, that, while ye indulge yourselves in your sinful courses, all your ceremonial services, however solemn and expensive, and even your prayers, amounting to nothing more than legal dissimulation, are utterly abominable, and do but more and more provoke me to wrath. 16-20. By faith applying the word, the blood, the Spirit of Jesus, for your effectual purification from sin, repent of and turn from your vices; and conscientiously exercise yourselves in the contrary virtues of piety, equity, and kindness.—In so doing, you shall not only find your most grievous iniquities, the murder of the Messiah not excepted, fully and freely forgiven, but enjoy a safe and happy continuance in your country. But if you remain obstinate in your his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider.

4 Ah^a sinful nation,¹ a people laden² with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters! ³they have forsaken the LORD, they have provoked ⁴the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone³ away backward.⁴

5 ¶ Why¹ should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt⁵ more and more: ²the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint.

6 From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds,

7 Your country is desolate, your cities are burnt with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers.⁷

8 And the daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a besieged city.

9 Except the LORD of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah.

10 Hear the word of the LORD, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah:

11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats.¹

12 When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?

13 Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new-moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity,³ even the solemn meeting.

14 Your new-moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.

15 And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.⁶

the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil;

17 Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

18 Come now, and let us reason together, saith the LORD: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

19 If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land:

20 But if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.⁸

21 How is the faithful city become an harlot! it was full of judgment: righteousness lodged in it; but now murderers.

22 Thy silver is become dross, thy wine mixed with water:

23 Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards: they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.

24 Therefore, saith the Lord, the LORD of hosts, the mighty One of Israel, Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies:

25 And I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin:

26 And I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning: afterward thou shalt be called, The city of righteousness, The faithful city.

27 Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness.

28 And the destruction of the transgres-active, upright, and faithful, and the people famed for righteousness in their dealings with men, and for their adherence to the covenant and worship of their God. Thus, through God's righteous execution of judgment upon the wicked and chiefly through the glorious righteousness of his Son, shall his true worshippers, Jews and Gentiles, be delivered from corruption and misery. 28-31. But dreadful and general shall be the ruin of obstinate sinners, who continue in their rebellion against God, and contempt of his worship and Son. Their idols and groves, instead of preserving them, shall add to their confusion and misery.—Deprived of every delight and every enjoyment, they and their idols shall, in the most easy, irresistible, and remediless manner, be destroyed by the sure judgment of God, procured by their sins.

Ver. 2. 'It is Jehovah that speaketh.' 'I have magnified and exalted children,' raised them to eminence in literature, arts, science, agriculture, commerce, and power. C.

Ver. 7. This passage cannot be regarded as literally applicable to any period during the life of Isaiah. It is prophetic rather than historical. It predicts a state of things which must inevitably result from sin and rebellion against God. The judgments are so certain that the prophet speaks of them as if already executed. The language is fearfully graphic, and the curse most terrible and comprehensive.—The country, fields and vineyards, plains and mountains, a desolation. The cities, including every inhabited spot, burned. The land, in all its produce and fruits, eaten up by strangers, and left like a wilderness. P.—Your country is desolation. The period to which this prophecy refers is not stated, but it cannot be referred to the reign of Uzziah, which was prosperous (2 Ch. xxvi.), but may well accord with that of the idolatrous Ahaz, 2 Ch. xxviii. C.

Ver. 8. Cucumbers of various kinds are in great repute in the East as articles of food, and consequently liable to depredations. Zion, in her ruined state, is compared to those temporary huts provided to protect the watchmen of the gardens, either in the heat of the day or dews of the night.—Note. Even the most prosperous countries have many ruins—objects of continual attraction to the traveller, the painter, or the poet. But there is scarcely a ruin in any land that is not a memorial of God's judgments against the kings and nobles, and churches and people, of other days—and a warning to those of present days to flee from the wrath to come. C.

Ver. 10. In all countries, and in all ages of degeneracy, there has been a constant effort at mutual recrimination between 'rulers and people,' the rulers charging the people with insubordination and want of economy, the people charging the rulers with misgovernment and extravagance. Under the ominous names of rulers of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah, God rebukes and threatens both. C.

Ver. 12. Who hath required this? He does not mean, Who has required sacrifice; but, Who has required sacrifices from such impure worshippers? C.

Ver. 16. Wash you, make you clean. That is, 'in the blood of the Lamb,' Re. 7. 14. Neither is there cleansing or salvation in any other. C.

Ver. 18. While as snow that fell from heaven and never was trodden on or stained. White as wool that has been cleansed in water from all impurity. C.

Ver. 23. Gifts. 'Bribes.' The common and abiding curse of all eastern despotisms, in which justice is bought and sold as a common article of traffic; and one of the most portentous symptoms of degeneracy and signs of judgment that can ever infect any individual church or nation. C.

Ver. 25. The meaning is, that God himself, by his judgments, and the sanctifying power of his Spirit, would thoroughly purify his people, removing evil rulers, corrupt judges, and false principles, and developing righteousness and purity in heart, intellect, and social life. P.

Ver. 26. Spiritually this prediction has certainly been fulfilled, for the apostle expressly says, 1 Co. 5. 12: 'Do not ye judge them that are within?' See also 1 Co. 6. 1-5. But as the judgments were temporal, is there not reason to conclude that the literally have 'judges as at the first, and counsellors as at the beginning?' Lord, remember thy covenant, and hasten the time! C.

Ver. 30. 'The mention of trees and gardens, as places of idolatrous worship, suggests a beautiful comparison, under which the destruction of the idolaters is again set forth. They who choose trees and gardens, in preference to God's appointed place of worship, shall themselves be like trees and gardens, but in the most alarming sense. For, in answer to the tacit question why they should be ashamed and confounded for their oaks and gardens, ye yourselves shall be like an oak fading, decaying in its leaf, and like a garden which has no water,—a lively emblem, to an oriental reader, of entire desolation' (Alexander). P.

REFLECTIONS.—Prophets and ministers must always declare that will of God which themselves have seen and believed: and God often much diversifies the opportunities which he gives them to declare it. In the most awful manner both heaven and earth attest the importance of what he speaks, and the equity of what he inflicts. How horrid is ingratitude, notwithstanding mercies innumerable received! And shocking is the ignorance and thoughtlessness which are sometimes found among professors of the truth. When heinous corruptions become universal, inveterate, and highly aggravated, what can be expected but ruinous judgments, in which every act and form of wickedness will be resented! But desperate is their case who are hardened by both mercies and judgments, and to whom God ceases to be a reprover. It is a great mercy for a nation, universally ripe for ruin, to have yet a small number of eminent saints. Thrice happy are they who are of the number, and are by true faith preserved from going to hell with the multitude. The greatest enemies to the power of godliness are often the most rigid observers of the form; and men will flee to their most costly devotions for relief, while they cleave to the sins which are the cause of their misery. But nothing is more abominable to God than indulged hypocrisy in our devotions. Indulged sin is so odious

VIEW FROM THE MOUNT OF BEATITUDES—SHOWING WHERE CHRIST DELIVERED THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT. [Isaiah, ii:3.]—
“And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.” Looking from the Mount of Beatitudes toward the east, we see beneath our feet Lake Galilee, the most beautiful body of water in the world, and then rising gloomy and solemn above it and beyond it, the mountains and hills which make up the Gadarene country. Mount Hermon to the north is in full view, and the whole horizon we take in from this point is filled with points connected with the history of modern civilization. Here was uttered the sermon, which by common consent of the human race, is put down as the wisest that ever fell from the lips of man. Here was the scene of the famous victory of Saladin over the Crusaders on July 5th, 1187.

r It is well to observe the close connection between this chapter and the preceding. The first verse assigns the reason for the injunction given in ver. 22. He is about to take away even the means of supporting life—bread and water.—P.

15 What mean ye that ye ^bbeat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord God of hosts.

16 ^cMoreover, the LORD saith, Because ^dthe daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched-forth necks and wanton eyes,⁶ walking and mincing⁷ as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet:

17 Therefore the LORD will ^esmite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the LORD will discover⁸ their secret parts.

22 The changeable suits of apparel,⁹ and the ward in remembrance of mighty things done by the Lord; and may look forward in hope of the church's still greater enlargement, purity, and peace. How delightful will it be when every one shall provoke his neighbour to learn the truths of Jesus, embrace his person, and serve him in the beauties of holiness!—But, alas! the guilt, the plagues which corrupt professors entail on themselves by intimacy with carnal and profane men, and even by their insatiable desire of that which is good in itself, or by inordinate dependence thereon! It is impossible, either by flight or resistance, to save either ourselves or our idols when God attempts to destroy. In order to glorify him, pride must be debased and idols dethroned. And to wean or tear our affections from earthly things, the earth itself, and its works, must be dissolved or burned up. But, alas! what havoc must be made before men can be affrighted from their idols! and what grace must be exerted before they penitently turn from them!

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1-7. These miseries came upon them by the Syrians and Israelites under Ahaz; by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-grecians, and Romans. [See Introduction, ch. iv. section xviii.] By the sieges and other judgments they shall be deprived of the common necessities of life, and all their men of ability, either for war, government, or trade, be cut off. Their governors shall be destitute of either sense or authority: every one shall behave in as unjust and insolent a manner as he pleases. And when any person that has any property left him shall be solicited to take the charge of the state, in order to prevent or retrieve its ruin, he shall absolutely refuse. 8, 9. And, indeed, their insolent defiance of God and his Christ to his face, by their words and deeds, have rendered their case desperately ruinous. By their impudent practising, and even boasting, of the most horrid abominations, they have not only ruined their country, but entailed upon their souls everlasting ruin. 10, 11. For as those who are righteous, by faith in Jesus Christ, shall have their conversation in him graciously rewarded with spiritual and eternal blessings, so those who are wicked in their heart and practice shall, here and hereafter, be miserably punished, according to their deserts. 12-15. So miserable is the condition of these Jews, who once entered into covenant relation to myself, and who still profess to be my people, that the most foolish and weak govern and oppress them; their teachers and rulers decoy and lead them into wickedness and ruin. Therefore the Lord arises to reward his oppressed poor ones, and to punish them who have seized upon their property, and cruelly abused and enslaved their persons.

Ver. 1. Never has there been drawn such another picture of national calamity: every figure pointing to sin and judgment. Bread taken away by the ruin of agriculture and commerce; water by drought from heaven, or the violent usurpation or filling up of their wells; men of wisdom and might, and skill and influence, slain or expatriated; children in intellect, and babes in power, advanced to govern: mutual, undistinguishing, universal oppression; a total confusion of ranks and order—all rule become so odious and impracticable that men revolt from the toils of government—Jerusalem ruined, and Judah fallen. C.
Ver. 10. Say ye to the righteous. Who? The house of Jacob, who hear and come, and 'walk in the light of the Lord,' ch. 2:5; and who, warned by the judgments of God, have learned to 'cease from man,' ver. 22. C.

Ver. 12. Children and women may be figurative expressions for puerile and feeble rulers; but seem rather to be literal descriptions: for the children of the goddess nobility were likely, in their very thoughtlessness, to be the most cruel oppressors; and never yet did a civilized country degenerate by luxury, that women were not found holding an unnatural place in their counsels and government. Happy that nation, and favoured of Heaven, where children do not rule, but are ruled! and where godly women 'guide the house,' modestly confine themselves to domestic, pious, and charitable duties, 'and give none occasion to the (ungodly) adversary to speak reproachfully,' 1 Ti. 5: 14. C.

Ver. 16. The prophetic denunciation against 'the daughters of Zion' is placed last: because, in point of fact, the women of a country oftentimes retain their religious principles when the men have become totally infidel and depraved. And therefore, when women have cast aside modesty, have delivered themselves over to the idolatry of dress and ornament, and have sacrificed domestic retirement to public show, then is national ruin nigh at hand, without any visible means of retarding its progress. C.—A tinkling with their feet. Eastern females still wear loose chains and rings about their ankles which produce a tinkling sound, which fashion the Jewesses seem to have lately imported, as no previous reference is made to such ornaments.—Sir W. Jones—Rogers—Ward.

Ver. 17. Discover their secret parts. This alludes to the horrible custom still prevalent in all slave-dealing countries—that of exposing the slaves naked in the slave-market! Blessed be God! Britain has broken the chains of her slaves, and done what she might to wash out the record of her national guilt. But when will other nations, called Christian, repent, and follow her example! Grant the nations, O Lord, repentance unto life, lest thy judgments come as upon Jerusalem and Judah, and leave them desolate for their sins. C.

Ver. 24. The scanty dress of many semi-barbarous nations—while standing still, instead of moving in the march of improvement—may often be accurately ascertained and described; but the various dresses of civilized nations, exerting their free energies in agriculture, arts, and commerce, it is generally impossible to ascertain by the aid of names. In such communities the 'fashion of the world soon passeth away.' All conjecture as to these different portions of dress is therefore avoided as useless; it

CHAPTER V.

1 Under the parable of a vineyard God justifieth his severe judgments on his people. 8 His judgments upon covetousness, 11 upon riot, 13 upon impiety, 20 and upon injustice. 26 The executioners of God's judgments.

NOW will^a I sing to my well-beloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My well-beloved hath a vineyard¹ in a very fruitful hill.²

2 And^a he fenced it,³ and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made⁴ a wine-press therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.

4 What^a could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden⁵ down:

6 And^k I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned nor digged; but there shall come up briars and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is is enough to see that riches and arts were grievously abused, and that the pride and vanity of dress, being idolatry, were grievously punished by personal degradations and national ruin. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the most diversified shapes can God punish sin and show the emptiness of creatures. And sins unrepented of certainly prove ruinous at last. But nations are evidently near to the most fearful destruction when all ranks and sexes are abandoned to and impudent in sinning; or when folly and weakness are at the helm of government; when popular tumults dare to interrupt the administration of justice; and when those who ought to be distinguished blessings in Church or state have become the principal plagues.—What a remarkable difference God puts between the righteous and the wicked! And who can either withstand or escape the judgment which he appoints to them? With great faithfulness and courage ought ministers therefore to give both saints and sinners their portion. At what expense of money, care, and time do many, especially women, hang out before the world the infallible tokens of their emptiness, pride, and wicked inclinations! And often by their wickedness they bring to themselves, shocking disgrace, abominable appearances, loathsome diseases, pinching poverty, and desolating judgments.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 2-4. Not only shall the fields yield abundant increase, but Jesus Christ shall shine forth in his glory; bring forth for, and communicate to, his chosen people, whom he has reserved for himself, the precious fruits of spiritual and eternal blessings:—while they, refined in the furnace of his judgments, justified by his blood, and sanctified by his Spirit, shall be remarkably sound in their principles, and holy in their hearts and conversations. 5, 6. And as the Lord by his pillar of cloud and fire protected, refreshed, and guided the Israelites in the wilderness, so shall he by his blood, his power, his care, his glory displayed, protect his church.

Ver. 1. In that day. What is meant by 'that day?' Looking backward in the prophecy, ch. 2. 2 introduces 'the last days,' (see note), within which period again and again recurs 'that day.' It occurs ch. 2. 11, 12, 17, 20, characterized as 'the day of the LORD of hosts,' comp. ch. 6. 1, 3, with Jn. 12. 47, as the time 'when the LORD shall shake terribly the earth,' which generally signifies the land of Judea—'when the LORD alone shall be exalted,' the day when 'a man shall cast his idols to the moles and to the bats'—and in ch. 3. 7, 18, 25, when a man, on account of the universal poverty, shall refuse to become a ruler—and the 'bravery' of female apparel shall be utterly taken away. Farther, it is characterized, ch. 3. 25; 4. 1-3, by the destruction of men and unprotected state of women—and by blessings to them that are 'escaped'—and by the terrible judgments inflicted by the Gentiles on account of the unfruitfulness of Israel. Now, does it not hence appear, that 'that day' is not any one day or period in which all these events meet (for that is impossible), but any day or period within the 'last days,' marked by its own specific event, whether past or future? C.—This verse should be connected with the men of Israel recorded in ver. 25 above is here indicated by a bold figure. In that day, when the males of the nation would be almost exterminated, seven women would solicit one man in marriage, and that under the most humiliating conditions. They would provide for themselves: they would not ask of him either food or clothing, only his name, and the honourable position of wives. It is a sad and graphic picture of the misery the Israelites were entailing upon themselves by their sins. P.

Ver. 2. Branch of the LORD. The word 'branch' is one of the epithets applied to the Messiah in the Old Testament. See Je. 23. 5; 33. 15; Zec. 3. 8; 6. 12. The figure is beautiful and appropriate. Christ was a noble shoot from a royal though decayed family. 'The branch of the LORD' is Christ; and the joys and blessings of his future kingdom are here described. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How often women's high decking, to procure themselves marriages, issues in contempt and impudence! But let the much-despised Jesus and his fulness be ever precious to my soul.—Let his gracious election of me to everlasting life be manifested in the sanctification of my nature and practice. Amidst manifold pollutions of my heart and nature, let me depend for effectual purification on his power and blood. And amidst every danger let him, and JEHOVAH as reconciled in him, be our protection and comfort.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1-6. God's people, the Jews, were placed in the fruitful land of Canaan, from whence he had cast out the hardened heathens. They were the chosen offspring of Abraham, fenced about by a covenant of peculiar protection, blessed with the knowledge of the true religion, and with a temple, altar, and the manifold ordinances thereof, and with every other external means of rendering them fruitful in good works. Instead of yielding the fruits of righteousness to the praise of the glory of God, as might have been expected, they abandoned themselves to errors and immoralities; wherefore he will give up them and all that they have to be seized and destroyed by their enemies. Their country shall be rendered desolate, without either ministers or magistrates to take care of them, and their fields quite barren and cursed. Errors, and immoralities too, shall everywhere abound among them, and all spiritual and comfortable influences shall be restrained.—14, 15. Multitudes of their nobles and merry revellers shall be hurled into the depths of death and damnation; and persons of every rank shall be debased or ruined. 16. But God shall manifest the glory of his power, holiness, justice, and truth, in the righteous punishment of these incorrigible sinners. 17. And while the poor who fear his name shall enjoy the fruits

EXTERIOR OF ST. PAUL'S—A BEAUTIFUL CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN THE CITY OF ROME, SAID TO STAND NEAR THE SPOT WHERE ST. PAUL WAS PUT TO DEATH. [Isaiah, iv:4-6.]—In the three verses referred to above Christ is represented as cleansing, guiding, and preserving the church. The Lord is represented as creating upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud of smoke by day, and the shining of a flame of fire by night. There is to be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge and for a covert from storm and from rain. Without fear and without doubt the church may go forth in the discharge of its duty, relying upon the everlasting truth that God shall keep it safely. His mountains are to be round about Jerusalem henceforth and even forever more. The candlestick is not to be removed from out of its place. St. Paul's Church in Rome is but the continuation in modern times of the church which Isaiah referred to as the tabernacle in his day. This church stands just outside the walls of Rome.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Isaiah, in a vision of the Lord in his glory, 5 being terrified, is confirmed for his message. 9 He sheweth the obstinacy of the people unto their destruction. 13 A remnant shall be saved.

IN the^a year that king Uzziah died I^b saw also the LORD sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train^c filled the temple.

2 Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

3 And one cried^d unto another,³ and said, Holy,¹ holy, holy is the LORD of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory.⁴

4 And the posts of the door^e moved^o at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

5 ¶ Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone,⁶ because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

6 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me,

7 And he said, Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

8 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me,

9 And he said, Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

10 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me,

19 And he said, Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

20 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me,

21 And he said, Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

23 And he said, Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

25 And he said, Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

26 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me,

27 And he said, Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

having^a a live coal^b in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar:

7 And he laid it^c upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

8 ¶ Also I heard the voice of the LORD, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.¹

9 And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed,² but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not;

10 Make^e the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed.

11 Then said I, LORD, how long? And he answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate,⁴

12 And the LORD have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

13 ¶ But yet in it shall be a tenth, and it shall return, and shall be eaten:⁵ as a teil-tree, and as an oak, whose substance⁶ is in them when they cast their leaves, so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Ahaz, being troubled with fear of Rezin and Pekah, is comforted by Isaiah. 10 Ahaz, having liberty to choose a sign, and refusing it, hath Christ promised for a sign. 17 God's judgments are prophesied to come upon Judah by Assyria.

AND it came to pass in the days of Ahaz the son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, that Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, went up toward Jerusalem to war against it, but could not prevail against it.²

2 And it was told the house of David, say-attendants of God, and his instruments in the dispensations of Providence; or zealous, active, and humble ministers of Christ. Their covering their face denotes their inability to comprehend the glorious nature and mysteries of God; their covering their feet imports their being ashamed of their best services before God. 6, 7. The live coal taken from the altar, denotes the powerful, quickening, and heart-inflaming word of the gospel, as coming from and through Jesus as our atoning sacrifice. 9, 10. Go, warn this people of their dreadful danger in using the outward means of grace to their own hurt: go, and with the utmost diligence instruct, exhort, rebuke, and threaten them ing, Syria is⁸ confederate with Ephraim:⁴ and his heart was⁶ moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

3 Then said the LORD unto Isaiah, Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou, and Shear-jashub⁵ thy son, at the end of the² conduit of the upper pool, in the highway⁶ of the fuller's field;⁷

4 And say unto him, 'Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, neither⁸ be faint-hearted for the two tails⁹ of these 'smoking¹ firebrands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

5 Because¹ Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have⁴ taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

6 Let us go up against Judah, and vex it,² and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal:³

7 Thus saith the Lord God, 'It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass.

8 For¹ the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin; and within threescore¹ and five years⁴ shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people.⁵

9 And¹ the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah's son. 'If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.⁶

10 'Moreover,⁷ the LORD spake again unto Ahaz, saying,

11 Ask² thee a sign of the LORD thy God; ask it either in the depth,⁸ or in the height above.

12 But Ahaz said, 'I will not ask, neither will 'I tempt the LORD.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, 'O house of David, Is it a small thing for you to 'weary men, but will ye 'weary my God also?

14 Therefore⁹ the LORD himself shall give you a sign; 'Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call¹ his name Immanuel.

18 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall hiss for the 'fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria:

19 And¹ they shall come, and shall rest all of them in the desolate valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and upon all thorns, and upon all bushes.⁶

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a man shall nourish a young cow and two sheep:⁹

22 And it shall come to pass, for the abundance of milk that they shall give that he shall eat butter: for butter¹ and honey shall every one eat that is left in the land.²

23 And it shall come to pass in that day, that every place shall be, where there were a thousand vines at a thousand silverings,³ it shall even be 'for briers and thorns.⁴

threatening to destroy all before them, they themselves were quickly to be extinguished in ruin. 7-9. The power of Syria and Israel shall never be advanced further than at present: and by the twenty-second year of Manasseh shall the Israelites be wholly carried captive. 15. And as a child partaking of a real manhood, he shall live on common fare. 16. Within two years shall the present kings of Syria and Israel be both cut off. 18. The Egyptians are represented as blood-sucking flies, and the Assyrians as stinging and all-collecting bees, in allusion to the swarms of those insects in Egypt and Assyria. 19-25. Roused by the providence of God, and rewarded with spoil, they shall overspread the whole country, and cut off persons of all ranks, high and low, and render the once so fertile country a waste and uncultivated soil, for briers and thorns, and the residence of robbers and wild beasts, few persons or tame cattle being left therein.

Ver. 6. Tabeal. Who Tabeal was, and who his son was, is unknown; it is most probable, however, that he was some factious pretender to the throne of Judah, and related to the blood royal, either of Ahab or of Pekah. C.

Ver. 12. Ahaz here affects humility and piety: but in reality possesses neither, for as the Lord had directed him to ask the sign, though humility would have acknowledged unworthiness, piety would gratefully have accepted the offered evidence. C.

Ver. 13. Ye weary the patience of men by your maladministration; will ye weary God also, by neglect of opportunities, trusting his promises, and abusing his ordinances? C.

Ver. 14. Behold, the virgin shall conceive. This prophecy could not be intended for Hezekiah, who was now a young man; neither can it be applied to any of the sons of Isaiah, for none of them ever ascended the throne, as this child of promise evidently did, ch. 9.7. C.

Ver. 16. Before the child shall know. That is, before the child, when born, shall know to distinguish between good and evil, 'the land which thou hatest (Syria and Israel) shall be forsaken of both her kings.' And far within the lowest period allowed for intellectual development was all fulfilled; for Isaiah prophesied about 740 B.C.; and Tiglath destroyed Syria, 2 Ki. 16.9. and slew Rezin, about 738 B.C.—Hoshea slew Pekah, the king of Israel, about 737 B.C., 2 Ki. 15.30 (Macfarlane's Script. Chron.).—And thus, within a period of about three years, was all this denunciation fulfilled. C.

Ver. 18. See note on ch. 5.26. Roberts, however, asserts that the ancient Asiatic nations never kept bees in hives, or under any artificial management, as Cyril's statement implies. Still Cyril's description of customs in times so near his own, seems evidence preferable to any deduction from mere modern observation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To what alarming terrors, what murderous and destructive invasions and wars, does sin expose men! And while judgments ordinarily begin at the house of God, one guilty nation is made the scourge of another, and then quickly perishes itself! Severe, seasonable, free, and often unasked, are God's interposals for the relief and comfort of men. And if he be on our side, we need not fear the most furious adversaries. No plot, no attempt to frustrate his promises, can fail to issue in the sudden ruin of its authors. And the most proud and boastful are ordinarily the least successful in their enterprises. But faith in his promise is necessary to the establishment of our heart while they rage or reign. What kindness God shows to some wicked men for the sake of their ancestors, though with specious pretences of regard they often refuse the favours of God, that they may depend on an arm of flesh! But with earnestness and boldness ought we to avouch the Lord for our God, when others refuse their claim. Amidst the deepest distress, infallible are the securities, and strong the consolations, which are derived from Jesus Christ and his connections with us. God easily finds instruments fitted to execute his judgment upon obstinate sinners. And none are more readily chosen by him than those whom we have idolized, and confided on, in his stead. Yea, alas! terrible is the judgment that falls at last upon corrupt professors. Their barrenness under the means of grace, and fruitfulness in wickedness, curse, blast, and desolate the very earth on which they live!

DAMASCUS FROM SALAHIEH, THE HEAD OF SYRIA. [ISAIAH, vii: 8.]—Damascus is, beyond any doubt, the most attractive city as to its natural features to be found in the East. There is more in Damascus that takes hold of the imagination than in any other city. To its natural features, which are so rare and remarkable as to lift it out of classification with other places, is added its great antiquity and its wonderful historic interest. These render a time of sojourn here a perpetual delight. The population, the rivers, divided in channels, flowing through part of the city, coffee gardens, people from the desert mingling with rich merchants in their flowing gowns, all together make up a picture such as the eye never beholds elsewhere.

“Damascus, daughter of Abana’s stream,

How beauteous still are thy enchanting bowers;

Thy gardens that with fruits unnumbered teem,

The perfumes that exhale from loveliest flowers

Thy native charms defy the gliding hours,

But mar, alas, the work that man hath made.”

A STREET IN NAZARETH—WHERE MARY, THE MOTHER OF JESUS, LIVED, AND WHERE CHRIST WAS BROUGHT UP. [Isaiah, vii:14.]—"Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Nazareth, where Mary, the mother of Jesus, lived, and where Christ was brought up, is dearer to the Christian heart than any other place on earth, except Jerusalem. It was a small and obscure village in the Old Testament times, and is not even mentioned by name, nor even by the historian Josephus. Yet, from the fact that Christ was brought up here, it receives an interest and a significance which have led pilgrims to visit it for the past 2000 years. According to ancient records, it never rose to distinction until the time of the crusades. It was then made the seat of a bishopric. It is now the chief town of this district. It is also larger and more prosperous than in any former period of its history.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 In Maher-shalal-hash-baz, he prophesieth that Syria and Israel shall be subdued by Assyria: 5 Judah likewise for their infidelity. 9 God's judgments shall be irresistible. 11 Comfort shall be to them that fear God. 19 Great afflictions to idolaters.

5 ¶ The LORD spake also unto me again, saying,

6 Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Shiloah that go softly, and rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son;

7 Now therefore, behold, the LORD bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks.

18 ¶ For wickedness ^kburneth as the fire: it

REFLECTIONS.—God ordinarily tries men with lesser judgments before he inflicts such as are more severe. But it bodes well to a place when God sends to it the light of the gospel. And no load of adversity is so heavy, but Christ's presence can alleviate and his power deliver from it. Thrice happy are those ignorant sinners whose minds he enlightens in the knowledge of himself! They may enjoy much solid and spiritual joy, freedom, and victory, even when they weep and lament. Unbounded are the excellencies, high the dignities, sweet the relations, and savoury the names of that Immanuel whom God has freely given to us sinful shall devour the briars and thorns, and shall kindle in the thickets of the forest; and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

19 Through¹ the wrath of the LORD of hosts is the land darkened, and the people shall be as the fuel⁵ of the fire: no man shall spare his brother.

20 And^a he shall snatch⁶ on the right hand, and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied: they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm.

21 Manasseh,⁹ Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh: and they together shall be against Judah.⁷ For^p all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

CHAPTER X.

1 The woe of tyrants. 5 Assyria, the rod of hypocrites, for his pride shall be broken. 20 A remnant of Israel shall be saved. 24 Israel is comforted with promise of deliverance from Assyria.

WOE unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness¹ which they have prescribed;²

2 To^b turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless!

3 And^c what will ye do in the day of visitation, and in the desolation which shall come from^d far?³ to whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory?

4 Without^h me⁴ they shall bow down under the prisoners, and they shall fall under the slain. For^r all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

men! O the infinite zeal of JEHOVAH to honour his Son, and to promote the welfare of his church! Rejoice in these things, my soul—and again rejoice.—God shall make every opposer effectually to know the power of his wrath. But those risen fast for ruin who continue proud and impenitent under great distress; and whom neither cords of love can draw, nor afflicting rods can drive, to their duty. Hypocrisy towards God, and villany towards men, ordinarily meet together. And none are in God's sight more abominable miscreants than unfaithful ministers. But general concurrence in wickedness issues in general calamities upon all ranks. And often they, whom we make our partners in sin, or in whom we have trusted, are made the distinguished instruments of our ruin.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1-4. Dreadful shall be the punishment of you Hebrews, who make unjust laws, and pass unjust sentences, and who obstruct the course of justice, that such as are poor cannot have right done them. What will ye do when the Lord shall punish your nation by the desolating ravages of the Assyrians? Who will then assist you, or secure your power and wealth for you? Revolted from me, and deprived of my help, ye shall be rendered more miserable than others who are taken captives or murdered.—5-11, 13-15. And dreadful shall be the ruin of the Assyrians, whom I have now appointed to punish you Jews for your hypocrisy and profaneness, by pillaging your country, and murdering and enslaving many of you. The Assyrian monarch, ignorant of my providence, merely intends to gratify his own lust of dominion; and boasts that as he, by his own wisdom and bravery, has conquered many powerful nations already, and seized on their wealth, he will do the same to Jerusalem, let her God do what he can to resist him; since therefore he, who is merely an instrument in my hand, thus insults me, 12, 16-19. Whenever I have sufficiently chastised my own people of Judah, I will punish his pride, and by a fearful plague cut off most of his huge army in one night, commander and commanded together. 20-33. Then, as well as at the deliverance from Babylon, and in the gospel periods, shall the Jews be weaned from their carnal dependencies on Assyrians, Egyptians, or others; and shall, by faith and repentance, return to their Almighty God and Saviour. And notwithstanding the vast numbers of Hebrews, a mere remnant shall survive the repeated desolations of their country, wherewith I have determined to punish them. 24-27. Fear not, therefore, ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, when the Assyrians shall ravage your land, and, like Pharaoh at the Red Sea, threaten to swallow up your whole nation. Quickly will I remove the tokens of my anger from you, in destroying the Assyrian army by a fearful stroke, similar to that by which the Egyptians were destroyed in the Red Sea, or the Midianites destroyed by Gideon. And in that day, from regard to my promise of royalty with David, from regard to king Hezekiah, and chiefly from regard to the Messiah, will I completely deliver you from all subjection to them. 28-34. The Assyrians shall indeed, to the great terror of the nation, march up almost to the very walls of Jerusalem: but there will I, the almighty Conductor of armies, cut off by death most of Sennacherib's captains and valiant troops, and reduce his forest-like multitude to a despicable remnant.

16 There could be no more graphic and fearful picture of the state of disorganization in which the country would be involved by sin than that given here. Ephraim and Manasseh were the two tribes that had always been closely united; now they were at enmity, warring each other. And then, whilst rent by internal factions, they were still warring a united war against Judah.—P.

Wars have often been waged for mere purposes of spoliation and robbery. Even in modern times, when civilization is supposed to have effected a wonderful march of improvement, nations have been stripped of their noblest monuments of art to adorn the capital and minister to the vanity of a conqueror. But let nations beware of indulging the spirit of vainglory, boasting, or covetousness: the God that chastised Israel, that humbled Assyria, and annihilated Babylon, still sits in heaven, and rules amongst the children of men.—As one gathereth eggs that are left. Not forsaken, but left for a time by a bird flushed from her nest.—Peeped. But though the timid bird, moved by instinctive love, will flutter the wing, open her mouth (beak), and peep (chirp) in anxiety for her eggs or callow young; no man, no nation, was found bold enough to offer the shadow of resistance to my victorious progress! Such is the soliloquy of victorious pride—blind to the fall it must soon experience from a Providence disregarded or denied. C.

Ver. 19. The glory of the forest is already consumed, ver. 18; and the rest, instead of being as rising copse-woods that supply by multitude the absence of full-grown trees, shall be so thinly scattered that a very child could number them. C.

Ver. 20. That day. That is, upon the day when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and upon Jerusalem, ver. 22: a day of which the believer anticipates the dawn, when 'the Sun of Righteousness will truly arise with healing in his wings.' C.

Ver. 22, 23. Though Israel, because of idolatry, have been exposed to consumption as a spring exhausted by the heats of summer; yet in God's day of merciful visitation, they shall be as a spring that is replenished from a higher source, and overflow in pure and cooling streams. C.

Ver. 27. Because of the anointing of Jesus, the Messiah, to the office of Prophet, Priest, and King of Israel and the Gentiles, and the anointing of his people by the Holy Spirit, whereby they are regenerated and sealed till the day of salvation. C.

Ver. 28. The prophet here describes in language of great beauty and graphic power the approach of the Assyrian conqueror to Jerusalem, spreading terror all around; until at length, having reached the Holy City, the Lord in his might strikes the proud conqueror to the earth. It is probable that the description is ideal rather than historical; but it is not on this account the less accurate in its topographical details. Every stage is marked. The army is represented as leaving the great northern road near Bethel, and turning eastward to Ai. Advancing to Michmash, the baggage is left behind, and the troops thus disencumbered cross the wild ravine to Geba. Ramah, situated half a mile westward, 'is afraid.' Gibeah of Saul, which lies on the top of a hill in front, 'is fled,' for the terrible foe is in sight. The army con-

16 Therefore^b shall the Lord, the Lord of hosts, send among his fat ones leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire.⁷

17 And^c the light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briars in one day;

18 And^d shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field, both soul and body:⁸ and they shall be as when a standard-bearer fainteth.

19 And the rest of the trees of his forest shall be few,⁹ that a child may write them.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them; but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth.

21 The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God.¹

22 For^a though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant of² them shall return: the consumption decreed shall overflow with³ righteousness.

23 For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land.

24 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrian: he shall smite thee with a rod, and shall lift up his staff against thee,⁴ after the manner of Egypt.⁵

Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners⁶ of the earth.

13 The² envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.⁷

14 But⁹ they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west;⁸ they shall spoil them of the east⁹ together: they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey² them.³

15 And the LORD shall utterly destroy the tongue⁴ of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dryshod.⁶

16 And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

CHAPTER XII.

A joyful thanksgiving of the faithful for the mercies of God.

AND in^a that day thou shalt say, O LORD, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me.

2 Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the LORD JEHOVAH is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation.

3 Therefore with joy shall ye draw water¹ out of the wells of salvation.

4 And in that day shall ye say, Praise the LORD, call upon his name,² declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted.

5 Sing unto the LORD; for he hath done excellent things: this is known in all the earth.

6 Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant³ of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee.

of Jews and Gentiles one new man, so making peace! Let me believe, let me plead, let me hope, let me rejoice, that he who has begun to fulfil these great and precious promises, will perfect the same in believers.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. 'Taking occasion from the reference to Egypt and the exodus in the close of the preceding chapter, the prophet now puts into the mouth of Israel a song analogous to that of Moses, from which some of the expressions are directly borrowed. The structure of this psalm is very regular, consisting of two parts, in each of which the prophet first tells the people what they will say, or have a right to say, when the foregoing promises are verified, and then addresses them in his own person in the usual language of prediction (Alexander. P. — That day. The day of the second recovery of Israel from bondage, ch. 11. 12—a day yet future, but not doubtful; for God is faithful who has promised.—Thine anger is turned away. This comfortable word indicates the termination of all the series of judgments described, ch. 5. 25; 9. 12, 17, 21; 10. 4. C.

Ver. 4. His name. Whatever name, at any time, God has given of himself. See Ex. 34. 5; Ps. 8. 1. C.

Ver. 6. Inhabitant. 'Thou woman inhabitant'—the emblem and title of the church, no longer a woman hid in the wilderness, but restored to her Lord's house in Zion. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How far the glories and comforts of the New Testament church exceed those of the Old! The great forgiveness, through Jesus' blood, inflames the heart, and tunes the lips to praise. Nor ought JEHOVAH'S frowns to untune our soul. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. O the inexpressible pleasure of enjoying a reconciled God as our ALL and IN ALL! If he be ours, we may safely

Ver. 4. Smite the earth. That is, men who are of the earth, earthy, who mind earthly things.—Slay the wicked. That is, judicially deliver over wicked nations to destruction by the hands of nations generally as wicked as themselves, but who nevertheless execute God's righteous purposes of judgment. C.

Ver. 9. A good rule of prophetic interpretation requires that the destructive animals here enumerated should be understood as emblems of men of like evil dispositions. The rule is this—when a particular prophecy commences emblematically, the remainder is to be interpreted emblematically. Some have, nevertheless, interpreted ver. 6-9 literally, as foreshowing changes yet to be effected in the dispositions and habits of animals of prey—a speculation upon which, however pleasing, it is better not to dogmatize. The Lord knoweth. Not that any direct evil can result from the indulgence of a spirit of speculation which may soon terminate in an attempt to be wise above that which is written. C.—In this verse the strong and striking figures of the preceding passages are resolved into literal expressions. With such a key as is here afforded to the meaning, no rational and thoughtful critic can mistake the real sense of ver. 6-8. To interpret them literally, as if the influence of true religion would change the physical organization and natural instincts of beasts, is not only an outrage on common sense, but it is opposed to the true principles of interpretation. Ver. 6 can no more be interpreted literally than ver. 5. The whole passage is a highly figurative and graphic representation of the change that will be produced in human society by the reign of the Messiah. Love shall fill every heart, and beneficence shall characterize every act. P.

Ver. 10. His rest shall be glorious. His church glorified by the possession of his Word of truth, his ordinances, promises, and Spirit. See Ps. 132. 14; Col. 1. 27. C.

Ver. 11. The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people. So called as somewhat similar to the first deliverance from Egypt. See ver. 16. C.

Ver. 12. This glorious prophecy stretches away onward into an indefinite and probably still distant future. It embraces the Jews alone—the natural, and not the spiritual Israel. It shows that the remnant of them shall be gathered into the Messiah's kingdom; but whether the remnant or residue of the nation then existing, or the remnant according to the election of grace, cannot be determined. The countries here enumerated are to be understood as the representatives of all those lands into which the Jews have been or shall be scattered. God's providence and grace will reach them everywhere, and draw them in again. P.

Ver. 15. Tongue. The same word is translated bay, Jos. 15. 2; for though the Nile is called 'seven-streamed,' the title is poetical rather than literal. C.

Ver. 16. The general meaning of this whole chapter is that when the kingdom of the Messiah shall be finally and fully established, the Jews shall be gathered into it; all men shall be subject to the church; all obstruction and opposition shall be removed from the spread of the gospel; and universal peace and love shall prevail. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Come, my soul, behold the Lamb of God! Behold how he assumes my nature; is conceived and born of the Virgin, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and laid in the manger! Behold him filled with the Holy Ghost above measure, and qualified to save his people to the uttermost, and avenge himself of his enemies! Behold how his almighty grace transforms the most outrageous sinners into the most amiable saints! See his gospel rapidly spreading in the earth, and his power and glory revealed in the hearts of men. See him in prophecy conquering all opposition, removing every impediment, slaying the enmity, and making ⁴ The noise of a multitude in the mountains, like as⁴ of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together: the LORD of hosts mustereth the host of the battle.

⁵ They come from a far country, from the end of heaven, even the LORD, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land.

⁶ Howlⁱ ye; for the day of the LORD is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

⁷ Therefore shall all hands be faint,⁶ and every man's heart shall melt:
